

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, September 11, 1984

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Reverend Carol Davies, United Methodist Church, Stevenson, WA, offered the following prayer:

Gracious God, for the blessings of this day we give You thanks. As we acknowledge Your presence among us, we ask You to be with these men and women as they go about their work today. May they continue to be faithful servants always being mindful of those for whom they serve. May they be caring and compassionate, patient and understanding, yet bold to speak out for justice and peace for all people. May their ears be open to hear what You are saying, their eyes open to see the needs of others, their minds open to discover new truth about You and the world, and their hearts open to love. Give us all courage to meet the challenge of today motivated by the vision of Your kingdom. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 5177. An act granting the consent of Congress to an amendment to the Wheeling Creek Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention District Compact entered into by the States of West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 4164. An act to amend the Vocational Education Act of 1963 to strengthen and expand the economic base of the Nation, develop human resources, reduce structural unemployment, increase productivity, and strengthen the Nation's defense capabilities by assisting the States to expand, improve, and update high-quality programs of vocational-technical education, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H.R. 4164) "An act to amend the Vocational Education Act of 1963 to strengthen and expand the economic base of the Nation, develop human resources, reduce structural unemployment, increase productivity, and strengthen the Nation's defense capabilities by assisting the States to expand, improve, and update high-quality programs of vocational-technical education, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HATCH, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. QUAYLE, Mr. DENTON, Mr. WEICKER, Mr. EAST, Mr. PELL, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. EAGLETON, and Mr. DODD to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2878) "An act to amend and extend the Library Services and Construction Act," agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HATCH, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. QUAYLE, Mr. DENTON, Mr. WEICKER, Mr. EAST, Mr. PELL, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. EAGLETON, and Mr. DODD to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE REV. CAROL DAVIES

(Mr. MORRISON of Washington asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, there is a tradition within the Methodist Church of circuit riders and today's guest chaplain, the Reverend Carol Davies, is a modern-day version of the circuit rider made famous by history.

She serves two small districts in the beautiful Columbia River Gorge that divides the States of Washington and Oregon, serving the Stevenson United Methodist Church with 125 members and 34 miles away the Lyle United Methodist Church with 50 members.

Some of you can perhaps place the location of these two churches because they are in the shadow of America's active volcano, Mount St. Helens.

Reverend Davies is a northwest native, took her undergraduate work at Willamette University in Oregon, her theological training at the Pacific School of Religion in Berkeley, CA.

Like most churches, her churches speak through community activities. She is president of the Domestic Violence Council, vice president of the Senior Citizens Board and serves on the Mental Health Board.

Our guest pastor today serves in one of the most beautiful places in America, ministering to America's finest folks.

I thank the Speaker, Chaplain Jim Ford and our guest chaplain today, Rev. Carol Davies.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON S. 38, H.R. 1904, H.R. 5167 AND S. 2496

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from California, Mr. HAWKINS, as a conferee to fill the vacancies caused by the death of Representative Perkins of Kentucky on the following conferences:

S. 38, Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act amendments;

H.R. 1904, Child Abuse Amendments of 1984;

H.R. 5167, Department of Defense Authorization Act; and

S. 2496, Adult Education Act Amendments of 1984.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the chairman of the Democratic Caucus:

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, September 6, 1984.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker of the House,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to inform you that Representative Andy Ireland is no longer a Member of the Democratic Caucus.

With best wishes, I am,
Sincerely,

GILLIS W. LONG.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, September 11, 1984.

Hon. PARREN J. MITCHELL,
Chairman, Committee on Small Business,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is to advise you that Representative Andy Ireland's election to the Committee on Small Business has been automatically vacated pursuant to clause 6(b) of Rule X, effective today.

Sincerely,

THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
The Speaker.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, September 11, 1984.

Hon. DANTE B. FASCELL,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is to advise you that Representative Andy Ireland's election to the Committee on Foreign Affairs has been automatically vacated pursuant to clause 6(b) of rule X, effective today.

Sincerely,

THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 4164, VOCATIONAL- TECHNICAL EDUCATION ACT OF 1984

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H.R. 4164) to amend the Vocational Education Act of 1963 to strengthen and expand the economic base of the Nation, develop human resources, reduce structural unemployment, increase productivity, and strengthen the Nation's defense capabilities by assisting the States to expand, improve, and update high-quality programs of vocational-technical education, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. HAWKINS, FORD of Michigan, BIAGGI, ANDREWS of North Carolina, MILLER of California, CORRADA, KILDEE, WILLIAMS of Montana, BOUCHER, and ACKERMAN; Mrs. BURTON of California; Messrs. HAYES, ERLBORN, and GOODLING; Mrs. ROUKEMA, and Messrs. GUNDERSON, BARTLETT, PACKARD, NIELSON of Utah, and CHANDLER.

WHERE'S THE BUDGET, MR. PRESIDENT?

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday Walter Mondale forthrightly spelled out precisely what he would do to bring down the staggering deficits of this administration. Instead of the radical Reagan policy of borrow-and-spend, borrow-and-spend, Mr. Mondale plans to restore moderation to the Federal budget.

Mr. Reagan responded to the Mondale initiative by providing a photo opportunity for White House reporters.

In 1980, Ronald Reagan promised a balanced budget by 1983, or even 1982 if we were lucky. We now know that we were not lucky. Instead of a balanced budget, Ronald Reagan has given us 4 years of historic deficits which—when added together—exceed the total of all deficits from all Presidents from George Washington through Jimmy Carter.

Mr. Speaker, we now have Fritz Mondale's budget plan. Four years later, we still have only Ronald Reagan's promise.

Last spring the American people were asking, "Where's the beef?"

Today they are asking, "Where's the budget?"

A SEVERE THREAT TO THE COPPER INDUSTRY

(Mr. DAVIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing, with nine of my colleagues, a concurrent resolution to implement the International Trade Commission's recommendations to provide import relief to the American copper industry. Last Thursday, the President chose not to accept the ITC's finding of injury. The very existence of a vital American industry is threatened. The severity of that threat is illustrated by the ITC's unanimous injury vote.

Since 1979, over 40 percent of American copper workers have lost their jobs. Seventeen of the Nation's 25 largest copper mines have closed. On the day of the President's announcement, the single remaining copper mine in my district—which used to employ over 3,000 people—shut down all operations. If we do not act this strategic material soon will be available only from foreign sources. This is not in the best interest of our national security or in the interest of the tens of thousands whose jobs depend on a viable American copper industry.

I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort.

GUARDSMEN SHOULD NOT TAKE PART IN PARAMILITARY ACTIVITIES

(Mr. MONTGOMERY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, at this time I do not have all of the information I need to determine if the Alabama National Guardsmen involved in the Nicaraguan incident last week were hired by or were acting under the orders of our Government.

While I personally support covert actions by the United States, I am opposed to the involvement of National Guardsmen or Reservists who are currently active members of a Guard or Reserve unit to be involved in covert activities.

The National Guard is no longer just a support for the regular forces. The National Guard now has just as many combat missions as the active forces. If guardsmen are hired for covert activities, you are in effect putting active military personnel in a covert operation.

Mr. Speaker, I am seriously considering introducing legislation or a sense of the Congress resolution to prohibit National Guardsmen who are members of a Guard unit from participating in a covert action, whether they are working for our Government or for private groups.

URGING PASSAGE OF THE FAIR TRADE IN STEEL ACT

(Mr. SCHULZE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, the most recent monthly figures for imports of foreign steel clearly underscore the urgent need for legislation to control the relentless pace of imported steel. In July of this year, over 2½ million tons of foreign steel were shipped to the United States, marking an almost 1 million ton increase over the June level of imports. The latest figure, moreover, represents nearly a twofold increase in imports from the already high July 1983 level. In fact, July's figures establish a new monthly high for steel imports and represent a new penetration record for foreign steel.

Mr. Speaker, as distressing as these new import figures are, they only portend even further unemployment and plant closings for the domestic steel industry. Foreign steel imports have now captured an unacceptable 25 percent of the U.S. market while American steelworkers continue to lose their jobs to a tidal wave of unfairly traded steel. With thousands of other steel jobs now seriously threatened by this new flood of imports, we can no longer delay passage of H.R. 5081, the Fair Trade in Steel Act.

As one of the 221 cosponsors of this bill—a majority of the House of Representatives—I strongly urge the House leadership to bring the Fair Trade in Steel Act to the floor and to support import relief for America's steelworkers and firms.

BALANCED BUDGET AMEND- MENT AND SOCIAL SECURITY

(Mr. WEAVER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, the constitutional amendment to balance the budget is clearly designed to gut the Social Security Program. If Social Security is excepted from the Federal budget, as it should be, the Federal budget is revealed as being preponderantly military, over 50 percent of Government programs now spent in the military.

Those promoting the constitutional amendment to balance the budget clearly do not want to cut the military. They want to gut the Social Security Program.

I suggest, therefore, that we bring the constitutional amendment to balance the budget to the House floor; there offer an amendment to except the Social Security Trust Fund and pass the constitutional amendment without Social Security within the provisions of the balanced budget amendment. Then I believe the advocates of that amendment will let it die a quiet death.

MONDALE TAX CUTS AND FARM PROGRAMS

(Mr. GUNDERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I, like most of my colleagues, I think, was interested yesterday in what former Vice President Mondale said in revealing his plan for how to reduce this country's deficits.

Coming from rural western Wisconsin, I was particularly interested in that section focusing on agriculture, and surprised that the man who says he is going to help America's farmers was going to do so by cutting $4 billion in the cost of our agricultural programs.

I became even more surprised as I looked at the details of his programs. He said he was going to do so by enacting multiyear farm programs. He was going to match foreign export subsidies. He was going to stop all Farmers Home Administration farm foreclosures. He was going to provide a stronger soil conservation program. He was going to enact a stronger and better crop insurance program, and spend more money for better research. Yet he was going to do all of this and still cut spending in agriculture by $4 billion.

I know there will be a lot more taxes under Walter Mondale and I think there also will be a lot more spending, and a lot more deficits.

DEFICIT REDUCTION: IT TAKES A PLAN, NOT MAGIC

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday Walter Mondale unveiled his plan for dramatically cutting projected Federal deficits by fiscal year 1989. It has now become a political ritual, virtually a matter of orthodoxy in Presidential campaigns over the last decade to promise a balanced budget by the end of the first term in office.

Mondale offered a refreshing change. Instead of a vague promise he told the American public where he would propose cuts, where he would raise taxes, and where he would even make some add-ons to the budget. The contrast to the President's call for a balanced budget amendment, which would take years to put into effect and would still be without any reasonable enforcement mechanism, is dramatic. It is something the American people should take note of.

I do not agree with every item in the Mondale plan. But we should not fixate on what we do not like. We should fixate on starting a specific process on tough points to reduce the budget deficit.

I commend him for putting a plan on the table from which to work. Without a plan it looks like we are going to be left with a President who seems to think that a couple of constitutional amendments will magically erase the deficits without ever having to grapple with the details.

Budgets are made of details and I say right on to Fritz Mondale for having the guts to show the American people the kinds of things that will need to be done if deficit reduction is going to be more than campaign rhetoric.

TIMBER BAILOUT BILL

(Mr. CONTE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, a full page ad in the Washington Post called on the Congress to cut the deficit.

The self-proclaimed bipartisan budget coalition predicted economic doom unless a deficit reduction plan is adopted, and they said that "no spending program should be off-limits * * *." As true statesmen, these leaders of our country asked the elderly, the poor, veterans, and retired civil servants to put the country first and their own interests second.

But at the same time, two organizations signing this ad have begged the Congress for a Government bailout program that could dwarf an effort to save the Titanic.

Speculators in the timber industry want the Congress to terminate $3 billion in Federal timber contracts made in the 1970's. These companies planned to make millions using fixed-priced Government contracts. Now, because of poor judgment and low inflation, they want a Federal bailout—a business welfare program that will cost the Treasury $1.5 billion.

I commend these organizations for their interest in solving the deficit problem, but in this case they're barking up the wrong tree.

COVERT ACTIVITIES IN NICARAGUA

(Mr. MILLER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, several years ago the President of the United States came to the House and asked for permission to carry on a covert war against the people and the Government of Nicaragua, and this House agreed to that for a period of time.

Four times in the last year this House has emphatically said we do not agree with that covert war against the Government of Nicaragua and we have voted to preclude funds being used for that purpose.

We now read in the paper that the President and this administration are sitting idly by while private citizens violate the laws of this land to participate in that covert war. The Neutrality Act specifically prohibits the funding or sponsorship of private military expeditions against governments with which we are at peace.

We are currently engaged in negotiations with the Nicaraguan Government. We are currently represented in their country by an Embassy and they are represented by an Embassy here.

And yet we find out that American citizens have gone into Nicaragua to disrupt their economy, to kill their civilians, and to topple their Government.

It is time for this administration to support and enforce the laws of this land. And if our Government wants to make war against the country of Nicaragua it ought to come to the Congress and ask for a declaration of war.

This Congress has refused to declare war. And yet we find out that two American citizens participating in that covert war were recently killed in a helicopter crash, that U.S. officials at least knew of their activities, and that officials of the American Embassy in El Salvador helped these individuals' organization provide military supplies to the Salvadoran Army.

The President ought to come out against these kinds of actions. The President ought to enforce the law.

HONORING MIAMI UNIVERSITY

(Mr. KINDNESS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding educational institution on the occasion of its 175th anniversary. Founded in the beautiful rolling wooded hills of southwestern Ohio in 1809, Miami University in Oxford, OH, has long been known for its commitment to excellence.

Through the years, Miami University has been distinguished by its exceptional academic reputation and contribution to our society. Among the more notable graduates of Miami are U.S. President Benjamin Harrison, editor and publisher of the New York Tribune Whitelaw Reid, and Prof. William H. McGuffey, creator of the famed "McGuffey Readers."

Miami has achieved national recognition not only for graduating well-rounded and successful individuals, but also as the "Cradle of Coaches." In addition to Miami's main campus in Oxford, two southern Ohio branch campuses and the European campus in Luxembourg round out the opportunities available to a Miami student.

In a recent address, Miami President Paul G. Pearson said "we look to the past to understand our present and to help define our future." Through troubled times and much hard work, Miami has maintained its commitment to offering an excellent, well-rounded education and has been able to build on its rich inheritance. If the grand achievements and triumphs of its past are any indication of what lies ahead, then the next 175 years hold special promise for Miami University.

Today I am introducing a resolution commemorating the 175th anniversary of Miami University. I urge my colleagues to join us in supporting the resolution.

A RERUN OF 1972 WITH THE OPPOSITE RESULTS

(Mr. WALGREN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, the American public is thinking these days about how much credit to give this administration for the recovery that we are now experiencing. Some political commentators are even comparing the 1984 election year with 1972 when the Democratic candidate lost every State except one, Massachusetts.

I believe that if the American people apply the same standard to the election of 1984 as they did in 1972 we will indeed have a rerun of the 1972 election, but it will be Ronald Reagan who will lose every State in the Union except one; perhaps he might carry Massachusetts.

And that is because Ronald Reagan has simply done what the American people laughed George McGovern right off the political stage for simply proposing.

You will remember he proposed giving everybody $1,000. If you take our population of some 200 million and divide it by the yearly budget deficits we have been running it comes out to $1,000 for every man, woman, and child in America. It is no wonder we have recovery.

But in thinking back on George McGovern, I think we ought to remember two things: At least he proposed that we give everybody $1,000 instead of $20,000 to some people and $250 to others, and at least he proposed we do it only once.

THE DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION BILL

(Mr. McCURDY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Speaker, the unwillingness of Congress to pass a fiscal year 1985 Defense authorization bill can only be viewed in this election year by the voters as yet another indicator of the collective inability of Government to face and make the necessary hard choices in determining what's best for America's defense.

To continue to fail to come to grips with the resolvable differences existing between the House and Senate on defense spending will force us to pass a continuing resolution. This will seriously disrupt and slow production of critical weapons programs, delay or prevent new programs from starting and end up costing the taxpayers an additional $1 billion for every month that passes without a Defense bill.

When we, the architects of the Congressional Budget Act, ignore its provisions by failing to pass a Defense bill as required by this law, we further lose public credibility.

I urge my colleagues in Congress to face reality; bite the bullet; adhere to the provisions of the Budget Act and resolve our differences quickly. Don't make the defense of America a hostage to partisan politics.

WALTER F. MONDALE, THE ACTOR

(Mr. LUNGREN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, much has been said by others on the other side of the aisle for many years about President Reagan being the consummate actor, and that has been generally been considered to be a criticism.

Well, now, Walter Mondale has revealed himself as the consummate actor, perhaps with the biggest role.

Remember at the beginning of the primary he was Mr. Nice Guy. In fact, he was so nice some people called him Mr. Dull.

Then he decided to be Mr. Bad Guy. You will recall that, against Senator HART. Then in and around my district in his visit just last week he became Mr. Mad Guy.

Remember his line: "I am mad, I am damned mad."

Now we have Captain Courageous. Yes, Captain Courageous has jumped out of the box and told us that he is going to raise our taxes. Well, it might take great courage to admit that he is going to take more money out of our pocketbooks. So let us congratulate him for his courage, Mr. Speaker, and defeat him for his continuing old-time role as Mr. Liberal, Mr. Tax and Tax, Mr. Spend and Spend.

WALTER MONDALE'S BOLD AND IMAGINATIVE PROPOSAL ON THE HUGE BUDGET DEFICIT

(Mr. LEVIN of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I thank the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday Walter Mondale proposed a bold and imaginative proposal to address the critical domestic issue, the huge budget deficit.

His analogy to a poker game was quite appropriate. He put his specific proposal on the table of the American electorate, but the President has refused to show his cards, and that certainly sounds like a bluff.

The American people deserve something more than election year rhetoric, some of which we have just heard, in this crucial effort to control the budget deficit.

The President is acting like a prisoner of the present. It is time that the President tell us his specific thoughts about the future, including on the huge deficits. Optimistic platitudes simply are not enough.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or in which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken on Wednesday, September 12, 1984.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS MASS BOOK DEACIDIFICATION FACILITY

Mr. YOUNG of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5607) to authorize and direct the Librarian of Congress, subject to the supervision and authority of a Federal civilian or military agency, to proceed with the construction of the Library of Congress Mass Book Deacidification Facility, and for other purposes.

H.R. 5607

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Librarian of Congress is authorized and directed, subject to the supervision and construction authority of a Federal civilian or military agency, to construct the Library of Congress Mass Book Deacidification Facility in accordance with the general design developed by the Library of Congress and reviewed by the Architect of the Capitol, as set forth in the document entitled "Library of Congress Mass Book Deacidification Facility, Engineering, Design, and Cost Estimate and Drawings", dated December 1983. Such facility shall be constructed on Federal property within seventy-five miles of the United States Capitol Building.

Sec. 2. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Librarian of Congress shall equip, furnish, operate, and maintain the Library of Congress Mass Book Deacidification Facility.

Sec. 3. There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1983, sums not to exceed $11,500,000 to carry out the provisions of this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Young] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Young].

Mr. YOUNG of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5607 authorizes and directs the Librarian of Congress, subject to the supervision and construction authority of a Federal civilian or military agency, to construct the Library of Congress Mass Book Deacidification Facility within 75 miles of the U.S. Capitol at an estimated cost of $11.5 million.

Construction of this facility will allow for the deacidification of approximately 500,000 items of the Library of Congress' vast collection of approximately 80 million items on an annual basis. Currently, over 77,000 books of the Library's collection deteriorate to the extent that they can no longer be used on an annual basis.

Mr. Speaker, the Library of Congress, and libraries throughout the world, are facing an increasingly pressing problem, namely, the rapid deterioration of their collections due to the unstable nature of paper produced since around 1850.

Prior to the 1850's, paper was made from cotton or linen rags, and it could last for hundreds of years. By then, however, the industrial revolution and the growing demand for reading matter called for a cheaper and more plentiful source of paper. Technologists discovered their new paper supply in the cellulose fibers from ordinary wood pulp. But untreated pulp based paper was too absorbent to take a sharp imprint, so chemicals must be added to prevent the ink from running and provide for the proper absorbency. These chemicals, especially aluminum sulphate, sooner or later combine with moisture in the paper to form sulphuric acid. This acid, which forms at varying rates on all books published since 1850, is the direct cause of the disintegration of books.

Mr. Speaker, 12 years ago the Library of Congress' Preservation Research and Testing Office undertook a major program to identify the most universal approach for deacidifying books on a very large scale. This program involved a systematic investigation of all known liquid and gas phase deacidification processes and a study of new possibilities. After much research and experimentation of vapor phase deacidification, a process was developed and patented in 1976 by chemists in the Library of Congress which arrests the degradation of paper and increases the life of books and other library materials by a factor of 2 to 5 times. At present the effective life for acid paper books is 30 to 40 years, whereas this new process will extend the life of books in the Library's collections by 400 to 600 years. This process based on vapor phased impregnation of books with zinc, will neutralize the acidity and leave a residue of zinc carbonate to protect the paper from further acid induced loss of strength.

Invention of this deacidification process by the Library's chemists began with tests in an ordinary pressure cooker in the Library's Preservation Research and Testing Office. Further successful tests with large numbers of books were conducted in facilities of the General Electric Co. in Valley Forge, PA. In 1982 and 1983, the Library of Congress, in consultation with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration successfully conducted a large scale 5,000 volume test and did smaller scale testing in order to refine the process.

The present proposed facility consists of twin vacuum chambers made in a rectangular shape to accommodate pallets loaded with books. The building includes staging areas for book loading and unloading, a series of rehumidification rooms, and a complete developmental test facility which has its own small DEZ test chamber independent of the production system. In addition, the building includes support facilities for maintenance, storage, offices, heating and air conditioning. It is anticipated the Army Corps of Engineers will construct the facility for the Library of Congress.

The capital costs authorized by this legislation include $11.5 million for the construction of a new laboratory building, equipment and related facilities. The Army Corps of Engineers estimates that the building will cost $3.5 million; laboratory facilities and equipment, together with directly related costs will total $8 million. Funds for this activity are included in the Library's fiscal year 1985 budget.

The Library of Congress enlisted the support of the Army Corps of Engineers in locating a suitable federally-owned site for the facility. Consideration was given to existing facilities which could be converted for use by the Library of Congress, as well as the construction of a new facility. Based on the findings of the corps and the Library it was determined that the most cost effective facility would be one constructed at Fort Detrick which is located approximately 50 miles from the U.S. Capitol. This kind of arrangement is highly desirable because of the availability of engineering and maintenance services, fire protection and safety services, and security.

Enactment of this bill, together with subsequent appropriations, will enable the Library of Congress to preserve the Library's vast collection of books from rapid and total disintegration. It will also make it possible to preserve these books in their natural and original state, that magnificent product of the printer's and publisher's art, the hand held book. This "first of a kind" laboratory facility will be available not only to the Library of Congress but to the library and scholarly community throughout the country, and for that matter, throughout the world.

The Librarian of Congress is to be commended for his outstanding leadership in this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I urge enactment of H.R. 5607.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of this legislation just annotated by my good friend and distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds and I would like to associate myself with his remarks.

As we have just heard, H.R. 5607 authorizes the Librarian of the Library of Congress to construct a Mass Book Deacidification Facility at Fort Detrick, MD. This facility is to be constructed by the Army Corps of Engineers, on federally owned property, at an estimated cost of $11.5 million.

Since the innovation of inexpensive paper manufacturing techniques, utilizing wood pulp and chemicals, in 1850, libraries throughout the world have been plagued with the problem of books and manuscripts deteriorating due to the acidic nature of the pages from which they are made. Because of this, a great of time and energy has been spent to perfect a system to neutralize the acids in the paper. By neutralizing this acid, deterioration is stopped and the life of the books is prolonged.

With a collection of nearly 80 million items, of which 77,000 deteriorate annually to the point that they can no longer be used, the Library of Congress has long needed a preservation system that was both efficient and inexpensive. The Library's scientist quickly determined that the most universal approach would be a gaseous system; which in the words of one leading book preservationist would be the absolute ideal from every point of view, if it could be made to work.

Roughly 12 years ago, the Library set to work on the problem and now has proven that a gaseous system can work and be both efficient and cost-effective. Their unrelenting and unparalleled efforts resulted in the development and patenting of a vapor-phase impregnation process utilizing the chemical diethyl zinc, or DEZ as it is commonly referred.

In cooperation with the National Air and Space Administration, the Library constructed a pilot facility and jointly they successfully demonstrated the viability of this new, high-tech process. This legislation would authorize the construction of a full scale production facility, capable of initially treating and preserving 500,000 books annually and as many as 1.5 million when the facility becomes fully operational.

At this time, I think I speak for all of us here, today when I say that the men and women of the Library of Congress and at NASA are to be commended for their pioneering efforts in this very important field of library science.

The Public Buildings and Grounds Subcommittee has extensively reviewed the design of the proposed facility, as well as the Library's need for the facility, and agrees that such a facility is needed. The building is estimated to cost roughly $3.5 million and the laboratory facilities, equipment and other directly related costs are estimated to be $8 million.

I would like to point out to the Members that during the hearings on this issue concern was expressed regarding the hazards associated with the use of diethyl zinc. Our investigations revealed that like most things, safety is not inherent, it is planned and an extensive amount of safety planning has gone into this project.

Our primary interests were to insure appropriate steps were taken to minimize or eliminate all potential risks. During the hearings and in subsequent communications the Library demonstrated that the elimination of these risks was of critical concern to them as well.

The Library undertook a 6-step safety approach, in consultation with outside engineers, to identify potential hazards and minimize the associated risks. As currently engineered, the Library states they have eliminated any potential hazard to personnel or books with the process.

I think we all recognize that safety features can be engineered into any system but we still must contend with the human element. It is imperative, as the Library plans to do, that all personnel involved with the operation, either directly or indirectly, receive structured training in the handling of hazardous materials as well as safety procedures to be followed in the event of an accident.

This training should involve knowledgeable personnel from the chemical manufacturer. Training manuals should be documented and formatted in such a manner so that even those unfamiliar with the process have sufficient background and other relevant information regarding the procedure to operate the system safely.

I know the Library is as equally concerned about the safety aspects of the facility and through their continued efforts I am confident all potential hazards can be eliminated.

In conclusion, the Library is to be commended for their outstanding efforts and I am honored to have had the privilege to be associated with this legislation which will enable them to bring their many years of work to fruition.

I urge my colleagues to support the passage of this bill.

● Mr. HOWARD, Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5607 and first I would like to commend the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the Honorable ROBERT A. YOUNG, the distinguished ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the Honorable E. CLAY SHAW, and the distinguished ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, the Honorable GENE SNYDER, for their fine leadership in bringing this legislation before the House.

Mr. Speaker, the facility called for in H.R. 5607 will enable the Library of Congress to extend the life of its books by 400 to 600 years. For the past 100 years, scholars, librarians and archivists have been concerned about the deterioration of books produced after the 1850's. With over 80 million items in its collection, the Library of Congress is regarded to be one of the foremost centers of knowledge in the world. However, three-fourth of all its books are in danger of total disintegration.

Twelve years ago the Library of Congress' Preservation Research and Testing Office was faced with three alternatives in handling the deterioration of their collection: they could have allowed the books to continue to deteriorate; they could have transferred the books onto microfilm; or, they could have searched for a method to remove the harmful acid from the books. After detailed research, the scientists of the Library of Congress, in cooperation with scientists at NASA, developed and patented an inexpensive yet cost effective method of deacidification. The process they developed, diethyl zinc gas phase book deacidification, will annually treat 500,000 books at a mere 10 percent of the cost of microfilming each book.

The cost of constructing this facility is a small price to pay in order to preserve the very embodiment of knowledge—the hand held book. The Librarian of Congress is to be commended for his pioneering leadership in this matter, for this facility will be a prototype, serving as a model to libraries all over the world.

Mr. Speaker, I urge enactment of H.R. 5607.

● Mr. SNYDER Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5607, which authorizes the Librarian of the Library of Congress to construct a mass book deacidification facility at Fort Detrick, MD, and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

For nearly 12 years now, the preservation scientists at the Library have been working to perfect a system to deacidify the books in the Library's vast collection of over 80 million items on a large or mass-production-type scale.

For those unfamiliar, since about 1850, paper manufacturers have been using a chemical process to convert wood pulp into a fibrous chemical mat which we know as paper.

With time, the chemicals, which are acidic, cause the fibers in the paper to break down or deteriorate, which we easily recognize when a slip of paper or the pages of a book begin to turn yellow or crumble at the touch. To arrest this deterioration, processes were developed to deacidify the paper, but most of these processes are costly and time consuming, particularly if applied on a large scale.

The Library's scientists quickly determined that the most ideal and universal process or deacidifying books on a large scale would be a gaseous system, and their research efforts resulted in the development and patent-ing of a vapor-phase impregnation process utilizing the chemical diethyl zinc.

This process involves loading books and other Library materials into a chamber which is then sealed and into which gaseous diethyl zinc is then injected. The diethyl zinc reacts with the paper, neutralizing the acid and leaving a thin residue of zinc oxide to prevent further degradation.

When properly treated, the life of these books, which is currently 30 to 40 years, can be extended by as much as five times.

In cooperation with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's scientists and technicians at the Goddard Space Flight Center, the Library has been operating a pilot test facility and has already successfully treated over 5,000 books and other materials.

The results of these tests, together with the engineering data collected, has culminated in the planning and design of the mass book deacidification facility which this legislation authorizes.

The estimated cost of the facility is $11.5 million, of which $3.5 million will be used for the construction of the building and the balance for laboratory equipment, instruments, and other directly related costs.

The facility will be constructed on federally owned land at Fort Detrick, which is located in Maryland about 50 miles northwest of here, by the Army Corps of Engineers in consultation with an outside architectural and engineering firm.

When completed, the facility will be capable of initially treating about 500,000 books annually and as many as 1.5 million books when the facility is fully operational.

The projected unit cost of treating the books using this process will be roughly $3.50 per volume at plant startup and is projected to drop to about $1.80 per volume as the plant output and efficiency is increased. I might add that this is considerably less than the current procedure of microfilming books, which costs approximately $30 per volume.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it gives me great personal pleasure to have been associated with this legislation, which will enable the Library of Congress to put into production this new high technology process which they have pioneered.

The men and women associated with this project are to be commended for their outstanding achievements, and I hope that we can show our support and appreciation for their accomplishments by supporting the passage of this legislation.●

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. YOUNG of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Young] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5607.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. YOUNG of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Works and Transportation be discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 2418) to authorize and direct the Librarian of Congress, subject to the supervision and authority of a Federal, civilian, or military agency, to proceed with the construction of the Library of Congress mass book deacidification facility, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I do so so that the gentleman from Missouri could give the House an explanation of what he is doing.

Mr. YOUNG of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. YOUNG of Missouri. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, on May 18, 1984, the Senate passed S. 2418, a bill authorizing to be appropriated to the Librarian of Congress funds in the amount of $11.5 million necessary for the construction of the Library of Congress mass book deacidification facility. H.R. 5607 just passed by the House also provides for such construction, however, the language incorporated in H.R. 5607 simply clarifies the language in S. 2418. Therefore, as the gentleman from Florida is aware, the committee proposes to strike everything after the enacting clause in S. 2418 and substitute the contents of H.R. 5607 just passed by the House.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his explanation, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 2418

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Librarian of Congress is authorized and directed, subject to the supervision and construction authority of a Federal, civilian, or military agency, to construct the Library of Congress Mass Deacidification Facility in accordance with the general design developed by the Library of Congress and reviewed by the Architect of the Capitol. Such facility shall be constructed on Federal property within seventy-five miles of Capitol Hill.

SEC. 2. The Library of Congress Mass Book Deacidification Facility shall be operated and maintained by the Librarian of Congress, whose authority under the first section of the Act entitled "An Act to abolish the office of Superintendent of the Library Building and Grounds and to transfer the duties thereof to the Architect of the Capitol and the Librarian of Congress", approved June 29, 1922 (42 Stat. 715; 2 U.S.C. 141), shall be exercised to equip, furnish, and maintain the facility.

SEC. 3. There are authorized to be appropriated for a fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1983, sums not to exceed $11,500,000 to carry out the provisions of this Act.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. YOUNG OF MISSOURI

Mr. YOUNG of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. YOUNG of Missouri moves to strike all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, S. 2418, and to insert in lieu thereof the text of the bill, H.R. 5607, as passed by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 5607) was laid on the table.

COMPREHENSIVE DRUG PENALTY ACT OF 1984

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4901) to amend the Controlled Substances Act, the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act, and the Tariff Act of 1930 to improve forfeiture provisions and strengthen penalties for controlled substances offenses, and for other purposes, as amended.

H.R. 4901

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES PROVISIONS

SEC. 101. This title may be cited as the "Comprehensive Drug Penalty Act of 1984".

"(7) If the offense involved is a felony, all land and buildings used, or intended for use, for holding or storage of property described in paragraph (1) or (2) or for cultivation of any plant that is such property, except that no land or building shall be forfeited under this paragraph, to the extent of the interest of an owner, by reason of any act or omission established by that owner to have been committed or omitted without the knowledge or consent of that owner.

The court may order forfeiture of less than the whole of any land or building under paragraph (7) if the owner establishes that forfeiture of the whole would be grossly disproportionate to the severity of the offense or to the extent of the use or intended use. If land under paragraph (7) is used or intended to be used for cultivation, the court shall order forfeiture of only the portion of the tract so used or intended to be used, and if the cultivation is dispersed over less than all of the tract, the court may order forfeiture of a portion of the tract equal to the areas used or intended to be used for cultivation."

(b) Section 511(d) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 881(d)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" before "The provisions of law"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) In addition to the venue under section 1395 of title 28, United States Code, or any other provision of law, in the case of property of a defendant charged with a violation that is the basis for forfeiture under this section, a proceeding for forfeiture may be brought in the judicial district in which the defendant is found or in which the prosecution is brought."

(c) Section 511(e) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 881(e)) is amended in the sentence beginning "The Attorney General" by striking out "The" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in subsection (h) of this section, the".

SEC. 103. Section 511 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 881) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(h) During the period beginning on the date of the enactment of this subsection, and ending on September 30, 1987, the Attorney General shall forward to the Treasurer of the United States for deposit in the Department of Justice Forfeiture Fund any amounts of moneys and proceeds remaining after payment of expenses of proceedings for forfeiture under subsection (e) of this section.

"(i) The filing of an indictment or information alleging a violation of this title or title III that is related to a civil forfeiture proceeding under this section shall, upon motion of the United States or a claimant in that proceeding, and for good cause shown, stay the civil forfeiture proceeding."

SEC. 104. (a) A reference in this section to a section or other provision is a reference to a section or other provision of the con-

(b) Section 401(b)(1)(A) (21 U.S.C. 841(b)(1)(A)) is amended—

(1) in the sentence beginning "In the case of", by striking out "$25,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$250,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$250,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual"; and

(2) in the sentence beginning "If any person", by striking out "$50,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$550,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $2,000,000 if such person is other than an individual".

(c) Section 401(b)(1)(B) (21 U.S.C. 841(b)(1)(B)) is amended—

(1) in the sentence beginning "In the case of", by striking out "$15,000 or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$250,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual"; and

(2) in the sentence beginning "if any person", by striking out "$30,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$500,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual".

(d) Section 401(b)(2) (21 U.S.C. 841(b)(2)) is amended—

(1) in the sentence beginning "In the case of", by striking out "$10,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$100,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $250,000 if such person is other than an individual"; and

(2) in the sentence beginning "If any person", by striking out "$20,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$250,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $500,000 if such person is other than an individual".

(e) Section 401(b)(3) (21 U.S.C. 841(b)(3)) is amended—

(1) in the sentence beginning "In the case of", by striking out "$5,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$10,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $25,000 if such person is other than an individual"; and

(2) in the sentence beginning "If any person", by striking out "$10,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $50,000 if such person is other than an individual".

(f) Section 401(b)(5) (21 U.S.C. 841(b)(5)) is amended—

(1) in the sentence beginning "Notwithstanding paragraph (1)(B)", by striking out "$25,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$250,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual"; and

(2) in the sentence beginning "If any person", by striking out "$50,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$500,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $2,000,000 if such person is other than an individual".

(g) Section 401(b)(6) (21 U.S.C. 841(b)(6)) is amended—

(1) in the sentence beginning "In the case of", by striking out "and in addition, may be fined not more than $125,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "a fine of not more than $250,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual"; and

(2) in the sentence beginning "If any person", by striking out "and in addition, may be fined not more than $250,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "a fine of not more than $500,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual".

(h) Section 401(d) (21 U.S.C. 841(d)) is amended by striking out "$15,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$250,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual".

(i) Section 402(c)(2)(A) (21 U.S.C. 842(c)(2)(A)) is amended by striking out "$25,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$250,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual".

(j) Section 402(c)(2)(B) (21 U.S.C. 842(c)(2)(B)) is amended by striking out "$50,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$500,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual".

(k) Section 403(c) (21 U.S.C. 843(c)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "$30,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$250,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual"; and

(2) by striking out "$60,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$500,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual".

(1) by striking out "$100,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$500,000 if such person is an individual, or a fine of not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual"; and

(2) by striking out "$200,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,000,000 if such person is an individual, or a fine of not more than $2,000,000 if such person is other than an individual".

(m) Part D is amended by adding at the end the following new sections:

"ALTERNATIVE FINE

"SEC. 413. In lieu of a fine otherwise authorized by this part, a defendant who derives profits or other proceeds from an offense may be fined not more than twice the gross profits or other proceeds.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO FINES

"SEC. 414. (a) In determining whether to impose a fine under this part, and the amount, time, and method of payment of a fine, the court shall—

"(1) give primary consideration to the need to deprive the defendant of profits or other proceeds from the offense;

"(2) consider the defendant's income, earning capacity, and financial resources;

"(3) consider the burden that the fine will impose on the defendant and on any person who is legally or financially dependent on the defendant; and

"(4) consider any other pertinent equitable factor.

"(b) As a condition of a fine, the court may require that payment be made in installments or within any period that is not longer than the maximum applicable term of probation or imprisonment, whichever is longer. If not otherwise required by such a condition, payment of a fine shall be due immediately.

"(c) If a fine is imposed on an organization, it is the duty of each individual authorized to make disbursements for the organization to pay the fine from assets of the organization.

"(d)(1) A defendant who has paid part of a fine, may petition the court for extension of the time for payment, modification of the method of payment, or remission of all or part of the unpaid portion.

"(2) The court may enter an appropriate order under this subsection, if it finds that—

"(A) the circumstances that warranted the fine in the amount imposed, or payment by the time or method specified, no longer exist; or

"(B) it is otherwise unjust to require payment of the fine in the amount imposed or by the time or method specified.

"CRIMINAL FORFEITURE"

"Sec. 415. (a) If an indictment or information alleges that property is subject to forfeiture under this section, the United States may request an order for seizure of such property in the same manner as provided for a search warrant. The court shall order seizure if there is probable cause to believe that—

"(1) the property is subject to forfeiture; and

"(2) an order restraining transfer of the property is not sufficient to ensure availability of the property for forfeiture.

"(b) Any person who is convicted of a felony under this title or title III shall forfeit to the United States such person's interest in—

"(1) any property constituting or derived from gross profits or other proceeds obtained from the offense;

"(2) any property used, or intended to be used, to commit the offense; and

"(3) in the case of a conviction under section 408 of this title, in addition to the property described in paragraphs (1) and (2), such person's interest in, claim against, or property or contractual right of any kind affording a source of control over, the continuing criminal enterprise.

"(c) The court shall order forfeiture of property referred to in subsection (b) if the trier of fact determines beyond a reasonable doubt that such property is subject to forfeiture.

"(d) The United States shall, to the maximum extent practicable, provide notice of the provisions of subsections (e), (f), and (g) to any person with an alleged interest in property forfeited under subsection (c) and shall, in the manner prescribed by the Attorney General, provide public notice of the forfeiture.

"(e)(1) Not later than 60 days after the date of an order under subsection (c), any person with an alleged interest in the property may petition the Attorney General for remission or mitigation of the forfeiture.

"(2) Not later than 90 days after the filing of a petition under paragraph (1), the Attorney General shall make a written determination with respect to the petition. Except as provided in subsection (f), the property shall be disposed of pursuant to such determination, which shall not be subject to review.

"(3) A period specified in this subsection may be extended by the court for good cause shown.

"(f)(1) Any person (other than a defendant convicted of the offense on which the forfeiture is based) may petition the court for remission or mitigation of the forfeiture.

A petition under this subsection shall be filed not later than 60 days after the date of the order under subsection (c), or, if a petition is filed under subsection (e), not later than 60 days after the date of the determination of the Attorney General.

"(2) The court shall grant appropriate relief if, after a hearing, the petitioner establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that—

"(A) at the time of the offense the petitioner had an interest in the property that was separate from or superior to the interest of the defendant; or

"(B) in the case of an interest acquired for value after the offense, when acquiring the interest the petitioner did not know or have reason to know of the offense or of any order restraining transfer of the property.

"(g) A petition to the Attorney General or the court under this section shall be verified and shall set forth the relief sought, the nature and extent of the petitioner's interest in the property, the time and circumstances of the petitioner's acquisition of interest, and any additional facts and circumstances supporting remission or mitigation.

"(h)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the customs laws relating to disposition of seized or forfeited property shall apply to property under this section, to the extent that such laws are not inconsistent with this section.

"(2) The duties of the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to dispositions of property under the customs laws shall be performed under paragraph (1) by the Attorney General, except to the extent that such duties arise from forfeitures effected under the customs laws.

"(i) In any disposition of property under this section, a convicted person shall not be permitted to acquire property forfeited by such person.

"(j) In any action brought by the United States under this section, the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to enter such restraining orders or prohibitions, or to take such other actions, including, but not limited to, the acceptance of satisfactory performance bonds, in connection with any property or other interest subject to forfeiture under this section, as it shall deem proper.

"(k)(1) In addition to any order authorized by subsection (j), the court may, before the filing of an indictment or information, enter an order restraining the transfer of property that is or may be subject to forfeiture.

"(2) An order shall be entered under this subsection if the court determines that—

"(A) there is a substantial probability that the United States will prevail on the issue of forfeiture;

"(B) there is a substantial probability that failure to enter the order will result in unavailability of the property for forfeiture; and

"(C) the need to assure availability of the property outweighs the hardship on any person against whom the order is to be entered.

"(3)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), an order under this subsection shall be entered only after notice to persons appearing to have an interest in the property and opportunity for a hearing.

"(B) A temporary order under this subsection may be entered upon application of the United States, without notice or opportunity for a hearing, if an information or indictment has not been filed and the United States demonstrates that provision of notice will jeopardize the availability of the property for forfeiture. Such a temporary order shall expire not more than 10 days after the date on which it is entered, except that the court may extend the effective period of the order for not more than 10 days for good cause shown and for a longer period with the consent of each person affected by the order.

"(1) There may be a rebuttable presumption at trial that any property of a person convicted of a felony under this title or title III is subject to forfeiture under this section if the United States establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that—

"(1) such property was acquired by such person during the offense or within a reasonable time after the offense; and

"(2) there was no likely source for such property other than the offense."

Sec. 105. (a) Section 1010(b)(1) of the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 960(b)(1)) is amended in the sentence beginning "In the case of" by striking out "$25,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$500,000, or both if such person is an individual, or shall be fined not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual."

(b) Section 1010(b)(2) of such Act (21 U.S.C. 960(b)(2)) is amended in the sentence beginning "In the case of" by striking out "$15,000, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "$500,000, or both if such person is an individual, or shall be fined not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual."

(c) Section 1010(b) of such Act (21 U.S.C. 960(b)) is amended by adding at the end of the following new paragraph:

"(3) In the case of a violation under subsection (a) involving more than 1,000 pounds of marihuana, the person committing such violation shall be imprisoned not more than fifteen years, or fined not more than $250,000, or both if such person is an individual, or shall be fined not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual."

(d) Section 1011(2) of such Act (21 U.S.C. 961(2)) is amended by striking out "$25,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$50,000."

(e) Part A of such Act is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"APPLICABILITY OF SECTION 413 AND SECTION 414"

"Sec. 1017. Sections 413 and 414 shall apply with respect to fines under this part to the same extent that such sections apply with respect to fines under part D of title II. For purposes of such application, any reference in such section 413 or 414 to 'this part' shall be deemed to be a reference to part A of title III."

Sec. 106. Section 408 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 848), as amended by section 4(1) of this Act, is further amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) by striking out "Sec. 408. (a)(1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "Sec. 408. (a)";

(B) by striking out "paragraph (2)" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "section 415"; and

(C) by striking out paragraph (2); and

(2) by striking out subsection (d).

Sec. 107. (a) The table of contents for part D of title II of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 412 the following new items:

"Sec. 413. Alternative fine.

"Sec. 414. General provisions relating to fines.

"SEC. 415. Criminal forfeiture."

(b) The table of contents for part A of title III of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1016 the following new item:

"SEC. 1017. Applicability of section 413 and section 414."

SEC. 108. (a) Chapter 31 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 530A. Department of Justice Forfeiture Fund

"(a) There is established in the Treasury a fund to be known as the Department of Justice Forfeiture Fund (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'fund'), which shall be available to the Attorney General, subject to appropriation, during the period beginning on the date of the enactment of this section and ending on September 30, 1987. The fund shall be available with respect to the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.), the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951 et seq.), section 1963(c) of title 18, United States Code, and section 274 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1324) for payment (to the extent that such payment is not otherwise provided for by law)—

- "(1) of expenses of forfeiture and sale, including expenses of seizure and detention;
- "(2) of rewards for information resulting in a conviction or forfeiture;
- "(3) of liens against forfeited property;
- "(4) of amounts with respect to remission and mitigation;

"(5) for equipping for law enforcement functions of forfeited vessels, vehicles, and aircraft retained as provided by law for official use by the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, or the Immigration and Naturalization Service; and

- "(6) for purchase of evidence of any violation.

"(b)(1) Any reward under subsection (a)(2) of this section shall be paid at the discretion of the Attorney General or his delegate, except that the authority to pay a reward of $10,000 or more may be delegated only to the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, or the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization. Any such reward shall not exceed $250,000, except that a reward for information resulting in a forfeiture, shall not exceed the lesser of $250,000 or one-quarter of the amount realized by the United States from the property forfeited.

"(2) Any amount under subsection (a)(6) of this section shall be paid at the discretion of the Attorney General or his delegate, except that the authority to pay $100,000 or more may be delegated only to the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, or the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization. No such payment shall exceed $250,000.

"(3) Amounts under subsection (a) of this section shall be available, at the discretion of the Attorney General, to reimburse the applicable appropriation for expenses incurred by the Coast Guard for a purpose specified in such subsection.

"(c) There shall be deposited in the fund during the period beginning on the date of the enactment of this section and ending on September 30, 1987—

"(1) the proceeds (after payment of expenses of forfeiture and sale) from forfeiture under the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.), the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951 et seq.), and section 274 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1324);

"(2) the proceeds (after payment of expenses of forfeiture and sale) from forfeiture under section 1963(c) of title 18, United States Code, in any case in which the racketeering activity consists of a narcotic or other dangerous drug offense referred to in section 1961(1)(A) of such title; and

"(3) earnings on amounts invested under subsection (d) of this section.

"(d) Amounts in the fund which are not currently needed for the purposes of this section shall be invested in obligations of, or guaranteed by, the United States.

"(e) Not later than four months after the end of each fiscal year, the Attorney General shall transmit to the Congress a report on receipts and disbursements with respect to the fund for such year.

"(f)(1) There are authorized to be appropriated from the fund for each of the four fiscal years beginning with fiscal year 1984, such sums as may be necessary under subsection (a) of this section, except that not more than $10,000,000 are authorized to be appropriated from the fund under paragraphs (2), (5), and (6) of such subsection for each such fiscal year.

"(2) At the end of each of the first three of such four fiscal years, any amount in the fund in excess of $10,000,000 shall be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury. At the end of the last of such four fiscal years, any amount in the fund shall be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury, and the fund shall cease to exist."

(b) The table of sections for chapter 31 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"§530A. Department of Justice Forfeiture Fund."TITLE II—TARIFF ACT PROVISIONS

SEC. 214. (a) Part V of title IV of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1581 et seq.), as amended by sections 209 and 211 of this Act, is further amended by adding after section 588 the following new section:

"SEC. 589. ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY OF CUSTOMS OFFICERS.

"Subject to the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, an officer of the customs may—

"(1) carry a firearm;

"(2) execute and serve any order, warrant, subpoena, summons, or other process issued under the authority of the United States;

"(3) make an arrest without a warrant for any offense against the United States committed to the officer's presence or for a felony, cognizable under the laws of the United States committed outside the officer's presence if the officer has reasonable grounds to believe that the person to be arrested has committed or is committing a felony; and

"(4) perform any other law enforcement duty that the Secretary of the Treasury may designate."

(b)(1) Section 7607 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is repealed.

(2) The table of sections for subchapter A of chapter 78 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by striking out the item relating to section 7607.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, The Comprehensive Drug Penalty Act of 1984, H.R. 4901, which is now before us is the net result of a thorough examination by the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Ways and Means of the problems confronting Federal law enforcement agencies and their attempts to take the profits out of drug dealing and streamline forfeiture procedures.

In the 97th Congress, the Subcommittee on Crime and the full Committee on the Judiciary developed the predecessor to this bipartisan bill (H.R. 7140), and it passed the House of Representatives without dissent on September 28, 1982. A compromise version of this bill—now in essence H.R. 4901, along with other bills, H.R. 3963, the anticrime package—passed the House and Senate late in the lame-duck session of the 97th Congress by the margin of 271 to 72 in the House and unanimously in the Senate. The President, primarily on an issue unrelated to this bill, decided to pocket veto the anticrime package. In the 98th Congress, Mr. SAWYER and I introduced legislation similar to H.R. 7140 (H.R. 3299) and this bill was reported out as a clean bill from the Subcommittee on Crime on October 27, 1983 as H.R. 4901. This bill was reported as amended by the Committee on the Judiciary on February 28, 1984. Subsequently, the Subcommittee on Trade reported H.R. 4901 on June 1, 1984—they have jurisdiction over title II—and the full Committee on Ways and Means reported the bill on August 9, 1984.

I emphasize this extensive process since I believe that H.R. 4901 with the refinements made by the Ways and Means Committee is a careful and considered product of the House of Representatives.

As to the substance of the bill, at the present time we are faced with the ridiculous situation where drug dealers have been able to accumulate huge fortunes as a result of their illegal activities and the sad truth is that the financial penalties for drug dealing are frequently seen by dealers as only a small cost of doing business. For example, under current law the maximum fine for many serious drug offenses is only $25,000. The Comprehensive Drug Penalty Act of 1984 will substantially reform these fines and bolster forfeiture procedures. H.R. 4901 would increase tenfold and more the fines for major drug trafficking offenses and empower the courts to impose an alternative fine of up to twice the gross profits of the criminal enterprise. The bill provides, for the first time, criminal forfeiture provisions for all felony drug cases.

Additionally, the measure would create a presumption that all property acquired by major traffickers during the period of the criminal enterprise are the fruits of drug-related crime, if no other legitimate source for the property exists. The courts would also be granted greater power to forfeit the fruits of drug-related crime including land and buildings, and authorizes them to restrain the transfer of property pending the outcome of the trial.

Proceeds of these forfeitures would go into two $10 million per year revolving funds that would be used to finance further drug enforcement efforts and better maintain seized goods.

In addition, this bill would increase the scope of property subject to Customs Service "administrative forfeiture," which is a default judgment process, from $10,000 to $100,000, with no dollar limit on the default proceeding where cars, boats, and planes are involved; set up a customs forfeiture fund; allow the United States to discontinue forfeitures on property in favor of similar proceedings by State and local agencies; and increase some law enforcement authority of the U.S. Customs Service.

In this fashion not only will we increase efficiency and provide additional law enforcement funding, we will be making the punishment fit the enormity of the dollar volume involved in organized drug trafficking.

I urge your support for H.R. 4901 as amended.

I might say that in this Congress my distinguished colleague from Florida, CLAY SHAW, asked the Subcommittee on Crime to visit Florida, and Mr. GIBBONS of the Subcommittee on Trade was also concerned with this problem at a time when we had an enormous amount of inventory of seized boats and planes in Florida. Hundreds of boats and dozens of airplanes were rotting in the water or rusting at airstrips because we do not have the capability to process administratively through the present forfeiture process these assets. I saw yachts worth $350,000 that after 2 or 2½ years in the water were worth no more than $25,000 or $30,000. This situation was a criminal waste of money. More importantly, these belong to fictitious persons that gave a cemetery somewhere in Arkansas or some other place in the country as their address, and we know they are not going to show. To permit these assets to rot and to rust in this fashion, without bringing the proceeds in and managing these resources in a way where we can utilize them to foster and to finance other law enforcement operations, is just unforgivable. We have lost 3½ years of valuable time because we do not have new forfeiture provisions in the law.

So I want to say to my colleague from Florida: Thank you for hosting that particular hearing. It was a productive one, because it helped us to sharpen our focus.

I also want to thank my distinguished colleague, HAL SAWYER, who I think is a lawyer's lawyer, for his great work on this legislation. We have probably wrestled with forfeiture as much as any other crime measure in two Congresses, and we think we have fashioned a good bill.

I want to thank my colleague from Florida [SAM GIBBONS], the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Trade of Ways and Means, for his cooperation. I know that we were delayed somewhat because the full committee was working on a tax bill and was preoccupied in conference, and it took my distinguished friend about 2 months in order to arrange for full committee time so that we could process this legislation.

Well, time is running out. We still have time to pass this forfeiture bill, however, if you want a strong forfeiture bill, if you want to provide new tools for law enforcement, here is your chance. If you really do not want forfeiture, then this is your chance to vote against good, solid crime legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the estimated $100 billion that Americans will spend in 1984 on illegal drugs is the impetus for forfeiture reform. The profit potential of drug dealing is fantastic and is so large that existing fines are merely the cost of doing business. And so there are sometimes up to $1 million of bail treated the same way. Recognition that the drug trade will not be affected unless the profit is removed from the crime has led to the development of forfeiture as a form of penalty. The existing forfeiture laws, however, net only $5 million a year. A bill to strengthen existing forfeiture laws passed the House in the 97th Congress but was pocket vetoed as part of H.R. 3963 on other grounds.

Under current law, assets valued at more than $10,000 must be forfeited in proceedings in U.S. district court. Now, the dockets of the courts are overloaded. The U.S. attorney's office has more sex-appealish things to do than forfeiture and, consequently, it languishes through the procedure for up to several years before anything is really done, and in the meantime the assets sit and deteriorate.

As the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. HUGHES, said, we went down at the behest of CLAY SHAW of Florida, and looked at the situation in southern Florida. At that time, as I recall it, there were some 400 yachts tied up there that were in the custody of the Customs Service but could not be sold or liquidated because they were worth more than $10,000 each, and it was taking very, very long to forfeit them in Federal court proceedings.

In the meantime, there was pilfering and vandalism going on. The boats were not kept up because the Customs Service had no way of getting reimbursed for what they spent on it, and in addition to that, some $100 a month was being spent per boat for dockage expense to keep them docked. We went up to another area and saw airplanes, which had been used to transport drugs. Some of them were twin jet engine planes that would cost half a million dollars each, sitting there relegated to the same fate as the seized yachts at a small, private airport near Fort Lauderdale.

These things have to be corrected, and this bill is aimed at doing that. Under H.R. 4901, the present bill, we correct that problem in that we leave out completely a ceiling on the value of assets that can be forfeited summarily in administrative proceedings. I may say that the average time when the administrative procedure is able to be used is 30 days, which will turn them over and begin to put some of this money that was taken from the drug dealers, and turn it around and use it to put these dealers and their henchmen in jail, which I think is a very fine use of their assets. This bill will much facilitate that.

I believe that this forfeiture bill is the most important bill that we have turned out of the Subcommittee on Crime, and perhaps even the whole Judiciary Committee, during this Congress. I think it ranks together with the bill we turned out of our Subcommittee on Crime in the last Congress, amending the doctrine of posse comitatus, so that we allowed the armed services, particularly the Air Force and the Navy, to get into the act in interdicting these drugs coming into the United States.

I am very proud that we are able to bring this measure to the floor. I am very proud also of posse comitatus, which has worked fantastically well as some of you may have noticed. They say that interdiction, particularly along the huge Florida coastline, some 8,000 miles as I recall it, now makes it very treacherous attempt for any drug smugglers attempting to bring drugs into this country. It is really helping. I think this forfeiture bill is one of the principle steps that we have taken in this Congress and that it will rank with the modification of posse comitatus as a very effective law enforcement tool.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the full Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO].

Mr. RODINO. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4901, the Comprehensive Drug Penalty Act of 1984.

This bill deals with one of the most important crime problems confronting this country which is the phenomenal increase in drug trafficking in recent years. We are now faced with a situation where drug dealers have been able to amass huge fortunes as a result of their illegal activities. The sad truth is that the financial penalties for drug dealing are frequently only seen by dealers as a cost of doing business. Under current law the maximum fine for many serious drug offenses is only $25,000. Moreover, the Government's ability to obtain civil or criminal forfeiture of the profits or proceeds of drug dealing has been hampered by statutory deficiencies. This bill attempts to address these problems in a manner that will encourage the immediate and effective utilization of these new tools by law enforcement.

An overview of the problems with the current forfeiture statutes by Government officials in this and the last Congress produces a clear consensus about the need for change. What is less clear is the path to achieve that reform. Most observers agree that prosecutors face three major problems: Ambiguous statutes, problems in tracing the proceeds of drug trafficking, and difficulties in proof. The solutions to these dilemmas are numerous and pursuit of them can often create a divergence of views. For example, while it may be desirable to ease Government seizure of property involving drug trafficking, one must also be careful to protect the rights of innocent third parties. Frequently, it is these conflicting values that produce different opinions about the wisdom of particular legislative reforms.

In the legislation before us, the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Ways and Means have attempted to balance the strong societal interest in eradicating trafficking in illegal drugs with the constitutional rights of our citizens. I am satisfied that a proper balance has been struck.

I, therefore, strongly support H.R. 4901 as one of the most important pieces of legislation that can attack the basic economic motive for drug trafficking, and I would like to compliment Subcommittee Chairman HUGHES and the ranking member, Mr. SAWYER, for their bipartisan approach to this significant legislation.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER] and also the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] for the tremendous leadership that you gentlemen have both given our subcommittee, and right through the committee level on this most important piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, as was said earlier, the Subcommittee on Crime held a hearing in my district in south Florida to study both the failures of the Federal drug asset forfeiture process and the tremendous successes that the State of Florida has experienced under its progressive State forfeiture state. One of the most shocking examples of the tragedies resulting from the Federal system is the Miami River which is lined with vandalized rotting boats. In some cases, these ruined vessels were at the bottom of the river rather than on it. In many cases, we saw ships that had already piled up more dockage, that is the rent, for just simply the space that it takes up than these vessels were actually worth themselves.

On July 15, 1984, the GAO issued a report, "Better Care and Disposal of Seized Cars, Boats, and Planes Should Save Money and Benefit Law Enforcement." The GAO report documents monetary losses due to serious problems with current Federal procedures for storing, forfeiting, and selling seized conveyances. As of April 1983, Federal law enforcement agencies were holding over 4,518 seized conveyances—3,665 cars, 692 boats, and 161 airplanes—worth $82 million when seized. GAO's evaluation reveals, however, that due to lengthy forfeiture proceedings, inadequate security and a lack of maintenance, seized conveyances—plagued by deterioration, vandalism, and theft—frequently sell for only a fraction of their value at the time they were taken.

H.R. 4901 will end this decay and waste by providing the law enforcement agencies with the authority to properly care for and dispose of these assets.

Another important provision in H.R. 4901 permits the Federal law enforcement agencies to donate the assets to their State and local law enforcement partners contributing to the fight against drug trafficking.

We have found in our study of this issue, that many times turf problems seem to set in. Particularly when you are dealing with an asset of great value, it has been found that some times one agency would not share this information with another for fear that they would take over this asset at the time of seizure. Now with this legislation this can be bridged by our Federal agencies who can turn over the assets to States like the State of Florida.

Also, these Federal agencies can turn over these particular assets to States that have a procedure in their own State statute to accelerate or streamline the sale of these assets. These types of RICO statutes in the State law can be used by the Federal Government simply by the Federal Government contributing or turning over the possession, custody and control of these assets to the States.

When this important measure is sent to the President, I will work to ensure that it includes two provisions adopted by the other body. The first provision, called substitute assets, would permit the Department of Justice to forfeit substitute assets—property not purchased with illegal drug profits—when DOJ can prove the amount of illegal profits gained and hidden beyond the reach of the forfeiture process, such as funds deposited in offshore banks. The second provision would improve the forfeiture provisions in RICO, the Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. 1961-68.

RICO was adopted in 1971, the same year as the drug forfeiture provision amended by H.R. 4901. This proposal parallels the improvements in the drug forfeiture area in H.R. 4901.

With these two improvements, H.R. 4901 will provide an excellent tool for the law enforcement effort against drugs. More importantly, H.R. 4901 will take the profit out of this murderous crime.

I urge the Members' support for H.R. 4901.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished committee chairman, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. JACK BROOKS, and I might say two things before the gentleman speaks; I want to thank the gentleman for his cooperation in fashioning some amendments to the legislation that would enable us to retrofit some of the equipment so it can be used by the law enforcement and other agencies for their particular operations. I want to thank the gentleman for that.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4901, the Comprehensive Drug Penalty Act of 1984. H.R. 4901 will provide strong additional tools in the Government's war against drug trafficking by increasing the maximum fines for drug offenses, permitting criminal forfeiture in all felony drug offense situations, and expediting the procedures in civil and criminal forfeitures. In attacking the basis of drug traffic—the huge profits to be made in this activity—H.R. 4901 will tremendously assist our law enforcement personnel.

I am especially pleased that the bill, as brought to the floor by my good friend and Judiciary Committee colleague, BILL HUGHES, incorporates some of the work that has been done by my Committee on Government Operations dealing with conveyances which are used in drug traffic and are seized by Federal law enforcement officials. A study which was done at my request by the General Accounting Office last year suggested improvements in the handling of seized conveyances and urged Congress to expedite the forfeiture process, create an improved funding mechanism for preservation costs and for the acquisition of needed conveyances, and gain more oversight over the use by Federal agencies of forfeited conveyances.

H.R. 4901 follows both the recommendations of GAO and ideas which I incorporated in H.R. 3725, the Forfeited Conveyance Disposal Act.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4901 also permits the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General to discontinue forfeiture proceedings under this act in favor of forfeiture under State law, and to transfer seized property under such conditions to the appropriate State or local official. It also permits the transfer of forfeited property to any State or local law enforcement agency which participated directly in the seizure or forfeiture of the property.

In both respects, this represents a major departure from the traditional handling and disposition of Federal property. Current law provides a procedure under which the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General may transfer forfeited property, such as vehicles and vessels, to the General Services Administration, thereby allowing GSA to determine whether other Federal agencies can use such conveyances in their operations. This provision is unchanged by H.R. 4901. I hope the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General will continue to follow current practice in this regard, as it has been particularly beneficial to numerous Federal agencies, including the Coast Guard and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Given the vital importance of an effective war against drug traffic, these new provisions are understandable. Nevertheless, continuous congressional oversight will be needed to ensure that these new authorities are exercised carefully and judiciously.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I wish I could support H.R. 4901 in its present form. I understand the importance of having a criminal forfeiture procedure before us. I understand the importance of having it enacted into law.

As a matter of fact, this subject was title III of the President's crime package, indicating at least that it was no less than third in line of importance as far as the administration is concerned with respect to the entire area of law enforcement.

But at the same time, the procedure being used here compels me to oppose it in this version. As we know, we are here on the Suspension Calendar. No amendments are allowed. We are limited to 20 minutes of debate a side and we do not have the opportunity to debate two essential amendments and consider two essential amendments to this bill.

I would like to dwell just on one for the moment, and that is the question of substitute assets.

At the very outset, we must realize that one of the reasons that we are dealing with this very bill itself is because of the sophistication of many of the drug traffickers and organized crime figures concealing their financial assets is common practice, not only because of the prospect of forfeiture but also because their financial dealings might expose them to tax and currency laws.

This is particularly relevant with respect to drug trafficking which usually involves the passing of money, and because money is fungible or very fluid, it very frequently is laundered or transferred overseas where it is impossible to trace.

Without the availability of substitute assets, it is my view and the view of the administration and the Justice Department and many in the law enforcement field that you could have a millionaire drug king who imports and sells heroin, then deposits cash in a Swiss account and then the Government would be rendered incapable of reaching that cash itself.

That does not seem to me to be the direction that we want to go and it seems to me if we were offered an opportunity to vote on this floor, we would do much as they have done in the U.S. Senate.

I should note that a substitute asset provision is included in S. 1762 as adopted by the Senate on February 2, 1984, by a vote of 91 to 1. The forfeiture provision in that particular bill is strongly endorsed by the ranking minority member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Senator BIDEN from Delaware.

We should recognize that in a criminal forfeiture trial, the Government must prove that specified property of the defendant was used and obtained in such a way as to render it subject to forfeiture under applicable statute. If, after entry of the special verdict of forfeiture, it is found that those specified assets have been removed, concealed, or transferred by the defendant so they are no longer available to satisfy the judgment of the forfeiture, the court then may order the defendant to forfeit other of his assets in substitution.

That is the essence of the amendment that we are being denied the opportunity to vote on on this floor.

The problem we have is that major pieces of the President's crime legislation have, for whatever reason, found their way very, very slowly to the floor of the House. We are now told, as the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee has said, if you want forfeiture, vote for this bill. If you do not, do not vote for this bill. If you do not want to strike a hard blow against crime, then do not vote for this bill. Well, that is just not true.

The fact of the matter is this bill has some very good provisions. If you want to gauge it, you could say you could be soft on crime, you could be tough on crime, and in between, you could be semitough on crime, and these rules are allowing us to be semitough on crime because for whatever reason, some have decided that we ought not to have the ability to vote on the provisions suggested by the President of the United States, supported by his Justice Department and supported by a coalition in the Senate that includes Senator BIDEN of Delaware, Senator KENNEDY of Massachusetts, and Senator STROM THURMOND of the State of South Carolina.

I do not understand why that is being done. Some say that all we have to do is follow this bill which allows the alternative fine provision and that will serve the same purpose. I would suggest to my colleagues that that is discretionary under this bill with respect to the judge.

It was argued in committee, the chairman of the subcommittee suggested that we could use the fine to condition the time served by the individual. I thought this bill was directed at some of the worst criminals we had and it seems to me they ought to serve their full time.

In addition, they ought to be fined and we ought to be able to go against substitute assets.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am very, very sorry that we do not have this bill in the shape that we could have had with a simple opportunity to debate an amendment up or down, have it voted on within 1 hour or less than 1 hour's period of time.

The second provision that I think is extremely important is the RICO statute. The gentleman from Florida has indicated that they have this sort of criminal forfeiture provision in their RICO statutes, the racketeering statutes in the State of Florida.

All I am saying is, we ought to be given the opportunity to extend it to racketeering as far as the Federal Government is concerned, as opposed to limiting it here in this bill merely to drug trafficking. It is important that we touch drug trafficking, but we also should be able to attack major organized crime that does not affect drug trafficking.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, before I yield to my distinguished colleague from Florida, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, let me say to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from California, who seems to be my debating partner these days in and out of the House of Representatives on crime legislation, that this committee passed a very strong forfeiture bill in the 97th Congress. I suspect that my colleague from California voted for it. It basically has the same provisions dealing with alternative fine and the presumptions that are in this bill. It was a bill that was strongly supported by the Department of Justice, and I realize that my colleague is carrying water for the Department of Justice today, who all of a sudden decided this morning they are going to oppose the bill.

Let me say that the Department of Justice has opposed just about every bill that we have moved out of our subcommittee, including the posse comitatus legislation that we passed in the 97th Congress that it takes such credit for today. We have had a long struggle in trying to get this bill ready for floor action. The basic fact is that if we want to pass a forfeiture bill, this is the procedure. This is the only procedure where we can be assured that we will have enough time to work any differences out with the Senate.

As chairman of the subcommittee and as ranking Republican, HAL SAWYER of Michigan and I have made some decisions. We have to be the quarterbacks and decide how to move legislation through the process.

There were three other committees that had jurisdiction over aspects of this bill and we have spent the better part of this year just trying to maneuver this bill through committees, trying to get it to the position where we can vote on it. We have less than 3 weeks left.

The fact remains that if the gentleman, who can exercise his right to vote against any legislation he wants, wants to vote against it, that is fine, but the fact is, he is voting against a major crime initiative, one that I think is probably one of the most important crime measures that we will have moved out of the Committee on the Judiciary this year. We have lost 3½ years because the President voted the other version that my colleague supported and, frankly, I wish that we had a different procedure than we do, but we have to live with what we have.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES. I will briefly yield to my colleague, the gentleman from California.

Mr. LUNGREN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is, under the Suspension Calendar, if the gentleman wished to, the gentleman could have amended this bill before he brought it to the floor to allow substitute assets. The gentleman does not support substitute assets.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, if I may reclaim my time, first of all, RICO is not even germane to this legislation; and second of all, as a matter of policy, our committee opted for what we think is the only way to reach assets overseas, through the procedures we devised. It was a procedure that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER] and I devised, the audited fine provision and the presumption of forfeiture, along with other members of the committee, and we think that is far superior, that will reach assets in the Bahamas.

My colleague's substitute assets procedure is not going to reach assets in the Bahamas. That is why we settled on this procedure. It happens to be that the Department of Justice did not think of it. That is why they are opposed to it. They did not think of it.

It was our idea and, as a result, they are opposed to it. If we waited for the Department of Justice to agree to anything that we moved out, we would not move any crime legislation out of our committee.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS].

Mr. GIBBONS. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I am here today to support this bill, H.R. 4901. In doing so, I want to pay tribute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER], and to the others who have worked so hard on it. It is a fine piece of legislation. The part of it that pertained to the Committee on Ways and Means was handled on a bipartisan basis.

We had hearings. We worked on it hard. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] would be here today supporting this legislation but he has a primary in his State.

In the subcommittee and in the full committee, we did everything we could to improve it. Unfortunately, this same piece of legislation passed this Congress about 2 years ago and it was caught up in some other controversy and did not become law because of the reasons that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER] remarked about in his statement. I hope that this time it can become law. It needs to become law. The reasons for it have been so adequately pointed out by both the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

The forfeiture provisions in this bill are a vast improvement over the forfeiture provisions of the current law, and that is what the Committee on Ways and Means had the responsibility for. Although I have not polled the committee as recently as this morning, I think the Committee on Ways and Means reported this bill out unanimously after we had worked on it and it was done on a broad, bipartisan basis.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the bill will be adopted. If there are any other changes that need to be made in this very tough fight on drugs and narcotics, then I am sure this Congress will take it up. I do not know of a Member of this Congress who in any way wants to coddle any smugglers or drug pushers or bankers or anyone else that is involved in the drug trade. We are doing the best we can in the time limit we have and the very tough subject matter we are dealing with.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GIBBONS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to congratulate the gentleman for his efforts, both in the 97th Congress, because I can remember when the gentleman convened a special hearing in the closing days of the 97th Congress to deal with those areas of jurisdiction that the Committee on Ways and Means deals with. The gentleman has been extremely cooperative through his efforts and the efforts of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] and the committee.

I think we have developed a major initiative, and there are dozens of provisions in this bill that will improve existing law. But more importantly, it will enable us to provide the law enforcement community with some major new tools to deal with drug traffickers.

I spent 10 years in law enforcement. My distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Michigan, was a district attorney in Grand Rapids, MI, for a number of years. We both view this as major initiative, one that we had hoped would have been enacted in the last Congress and we were both sick to see this bill in particular go down the drain, 2 years of our efforts go down the drain, and we have lost 3½ years of valuable time.

I thank the gentleman for his cooperation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] has expired.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GIBBONS. I thank the gentleman for yielding this additional time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know any tougher problem. I have seen the evidence that the gentleman refers to, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] refers to, in the Miami River and the airports down there and in my own city of Tampa.

This is an honest, good-faith effort and in the Committee on Ways and Means it was certainly a bipartisan effort. There was no, and there has been to this very moment, no opposition to this bill by members of the Committee on Ways and Means that I am aware of.

We urge adoption of the bill, and we want to commend the gentleman from New Jersey and his committee for the fine work that he has done on it. I think it would be a shame to shoot down this bill by last-minute opposition, on a bill that has been pending for 2½ years. We have been delayed too long.

I rise in support of H.R. 4901, a bill to amend the Controlled Substances Act, the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act, and the Tariff Act of 1930 to improve forfeiture provision and strengthen penalties for controlled substances offenses. This bill is desperately needed by our law enforcement officers to attack one of the most serious problems facing our nation today—the increased trafficking in narcotics which is threatening the youth of America. I commend the gentlemen from New Jersey for the excellent work of the Committee on the Judiciary in putting together this excellent and extremely important piece of legislation to address this problem.

H.R. 4901, as amended, and ordered reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, consists of two titles. Title I, which is entitled the Comprehensive Drug Penalty Act of 1984, is under the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary and as favorably reported by that committee on June 19, 1984. It makes various amendments to the Controlled Substances Act and the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act, including increasing the penalties for convictions in all felony drug trafficking cases and creating a strong criminal forfeiture statute.

Title II, which is under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means, amends the Tariff Act of 1930 to provide for a more streamlined approach for handling civil forfeitures and to expand the arrest authority of customs officers. The bill would allow the use of administrative rather than judicial forfeiture proceedings in many more cases by increasing the current ceiling from $10,000 to $100,000 for most articles and by removing the ceiling entirely for prohibited merchandise and conveyances which are used to import, export, transport, or store any controlled substance. The bill also would raise the amount of the bond which is required to be posted in order to require a judicial forfeiture from $250 to the lesser of $2,500 or 10 percent of the value of the property. Additionally, the bill would establish the customs forfeiture fund to help defray the escalating costs associated with forfeiture procedures and provide the authority for customs to transfer seized or forfeited property to State or local law enforcement agencies. Finally, the bill would increase the compensation level which can be paid to informers from $50,000 to $250,000.

Under current law, judicial forfeiture proceedings must be used in all cases where the seized property exceeds $10,000, even though most cases are uncontested. This results in significant delays of up to 2 years, during which time the seized property frequently deteriorates, resulting in a substantial decrease in value.

Further, since customs may not currently use the net proceeds of one seizure to offset the unrecouped costs of another seizure, such losses must be covered by their regular appropriations. Because it is difficult to budget for these unpredictable expenditures, moneys have to be diverted from other important administrative or enforcement functions.

The changes provided for in title II should result in substantial cost savings to the U.S. Government, without adversely affecting the property rights of owners wishing to contest the forfeiture of their property.

This bill is desperately needed and I urge you to support its passage.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself one additional minute.

Mr. Speaker, alluding to the two items that the gentleman from California mentioned: substitute assets. If we can find substitute assets, we can certainly levy on them with a judgment fine that has been imposed by the court. If there is an appeal, that will not make any difference because the court has power to not stay any sentence pending appeal if there is not a bond filed. So I do not really see what the substitute asset really adds to the tremendously large fine the court is empowered to levy in this kind of case.

It seems to me, as far as RICO is concerned, that is the racketeering statute, it really deals with other matters and I think we have all the remedies we need in this forfeiture bill for the narrower scope of this bill. I do not see any point of tying it in with RICO.

So while I understand the arguments that are being raised, I think they are, frankly, without merit and the bill should be supported.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAWYER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is abundantly right. On RICO, as the gentleman well knows, we decided as a matter of policy not to deal with RICO except in the context of a hearing dealing with RICO.

There are a number of problems associated with RICO. The American Bar Association has some concerns with it, and the gentleman and I have both talked about this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER] has expired.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER] and I had both hoped that we could get to RICO before this session was out, but we have just run out of time. But I can tell my colleague, who will be leaving this year, unfortunately, and will not be coming back to Congress, that it is my hope that in the early days of the 99th Congress, if I am privileged to be here, we want to get into RICO and do the thorough examination that the gentleman and I discussed, which I think needs to be done not just in the context of a forfeiture statute but RICO generally.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman.

● Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 4901, the Comprehensive Drug Penalty Act. I am an original sponsor of this bill and have sponsored similar legislation for years. It is a positive and essential step in the direction toward taking the profits out of drug dealing. By strengthening financial penalties and reforming forfeiture procedures, this economic attack on the illegal drug business is an essential step in the overall fight against drug abuse.

We are all aware of the epidemic proportions that drug and alcohol abuse have reached in our country. It is clear that efforts to date to mount any economic attack on the illegal drug business have not been very successful. It is time to make drug dealing much more costly for those who profit from such a hideous crime.

This bill dramatically increases maximum fines for drug offenses, improves the Federal Government's ability to use forfeiture proceedings in drug cases, and permits the courts to prevent the transfer of property that may be subject to forfeiture. It also sets up two funds, with revenue derived from forfeiture receipts, to aid antidrug efforts by the Department of Justice and the Customs Service.

I am very excited about the drug penalty forfeiture funds set up by the bill. I think it's an excellent idea to use moneys obtained from forfeiture to finance law enforcement efforts by Justice and the Customs Service. But I think the moneys should be used for drug abuse education and prevention programs as well. I am introducing today a bill that would direct the use of some of the moneys received from forfeiture in drug cases for drug abuse rehabilitation programs. Next year, after the forfeiture program is in place, we can set aside moneys for drug abuse efforts other than enforcement.

I have long supported various measures to combat the problems of drug abuse in this country. I commend Chairman HUGHES for his excellent work in giving us a workable bill which will be a much needed tool in the fight against illegal drugs. I urge my colleagues to approve this legislation.●

● Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the Comprehensive Drug Penalty Act of 1983 will strengthen the use of forfeiture as a weapon in attacking drug trafficking and increase the fines available for serious drug offenses. Title III of the President's comprehensive crime legislation, which I introduced in the House as H.R. 2151, is similarly designed to improve forfeiture and increase drug offense fines, thereby combating one of the gravest crime problems facing our country: the importation and distribution of dangerous drugs.

H.R. 4901 creates a strong criminal forfeiture statute that would be applicable in all felony drug trafficking cases, provides authority for the civil forfeiture of real property used in the commission of major drug crimes, provides a funding mechanism whereby amounts realized in forfeiture cases can be used to defray the mounting costs associated with forfeitures, and amends the forfeiture provisions of the Tariff Act of 1930—a statute which governs civil forfeitures under both the Customs and drug laws—to increase the use of efficient administrative forfeiture procedures in uncontested cases.

This important bill, however, does not include two very important provisions strongly endorsed by this administration and included in the forfeiture bill adopted by the other body.

An important part of the administration's forfeiture legislation focuses on strengthening the criminal forfeiture provisions of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization—or RICO—statute (18 U.S.C. 1961 et seq.). H.R. 4901's forfeiture amendments are confined to those applicable to drug offenses. The authority to reach the profits and financial underpinnings of organized criminal activity through forfeiture is a necessary part of effective law enforcement in this area. This is the very reason that, in 1970, the Congress included criminal forfeiture as one of the sanctions applicable to violations of RICO. Combating racketeering is a top priority of Federal law enforcement, and depriving those involved in organized criminal activity of the financial resources they amass and use in this crime is an integral part of that enforcement effort. To be successful in this effort, however, we must improve existing forfeiture authority under the RICO statute. H.R. 4901 does not include these important improvements.

A substitute assets provision would also greatly enhance the effectiveness of criminal forfeiture. Briefly, a substitute assets provision works as follows: The Government must prove in the criminal trial that specified property of the defendant was used or obtained in such a way as to render it subject to forfeiture under the applicable statute. If, after the entry of the specified assets have been removed, concealed, or transferred by the defendant so that they are no longer available to satisfy the forfeiture judgment, the court may order the defendant to forfeit other of his assets in substitution. Thus, by applying a substitute assets provision, defendants would not be able to avoid the criminal forfeiture sanction simply by making their forfeitable assets unavailable at the time of conviction. If today's consideration by this body is to have real impact, a substitute assets provision is essential to punishing the organized, and clever, drug trafficker.

Drug asset forfeiture is one of the most important improvements contained in the President's crime package. H.R. 4901 has my pledge of support. In conference, I will work to include the stronger provisions of the Senate bill.●

● Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, the most effective law enforcement weapon against the infiltration of drugs is one that takes profit out of crime. Prison terms and insubstantial fines are meaningless as long as drug racketeers know that they can make millions by supplying illegal drugs. The forfeiture bills before us today would enable Federal Government to make substantial progress in taking the profit out of crime. This bill will take from the drug criminal all of his illegal gains and the equipment used in obtaining those gains. The proceeds in forfeiture will be invested in continuing law enforcement efforts.

The impact that this bill will have on all persons in this Nation cannot be overstated. The victims of drug abuse do not share in the profits of these criminals. They are little more than prey in a highly profitable illegal activity. We must take the profit out of this horrendous crime.

Although I enthusiastically support drug forfeiture laws, I will work to ensure that stronger administration-endorsed proposals be included in the final product we send to the President. H.R. 4901 does not include authority to forfeit substitute assets when the profits from the crime are hidden from justice. The version passed by the other body has carefully drafted provisions that would ensure the punishment of sophisticated drug traffickers in a way that is constitutionally sound and just. Another provision in the superior bill passed by the other body improved the provisions of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Practices Act, 18 U.S.C. Sections 1961-1968. This provision, if improved under these provisions, would greatly assist law enforcement efforts against the kingpin traffickers.

When drug dealers skip $1 million in bail, tough measures are required. Forfeiture is the tough response.●

● Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Comprehensive Drug Penalty Act of 1984, H.R. 4901, which I cosponsored. This bill will strengthen penalties for drug trafficking and deprive drug dealers of the tools of their trade through forfeiture of their property. Their boats, planes, and estates will be confiscated.

Drugs and crime are linked, whether it is actually the crime of drug dealing, as in this legislation, or the commission of a crime under the influence of drugs: Drugs cause crime. This very important bill will attack the sale of controlled substances by raising the price which dealers have to pay when caught. For example, H.R. 4901 will subject to forfeiture all land and building used with the knowledge of the owner for holding, storing, or cultivating illegal drugs or materials used to manufacture them.

This bill will stiffen penalties against drug dealers by increasing maximum fines more than 3,000 percent from $15,000 to $500,000 and by permitting the imposition of an alternative fine up to twice the gross gain derived from the crime.

These two provisions will go a long way toward ending the reign of terror that has descended upon many American communities. To highlight the importance of this legislation, one need only look at statistics which show that one out of every five American households suffered a rape, robbery, assault, or larceny during 1983. More than one-third of those crimes are drug-related.

This bill provides the country with tough laws which will show the drug pushers that this Congress will do more than pay lip service to the problems created by drugs and crime. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4901, the Comprehensive Drug Penalty Act of 1984, and I urge my colleagues to support this urgently needed legislation.

Narcotics trafficking and drug abuse is currently a criminal activity exceeding $100 billion per year, with the Federal Government spending approximately $1 billion annually to interdict illicit narcotics, to educate our citizens on the dangers of drug abuse, and to treat and rehabilitate those individuals who are dependent upon or addicted to drugs. Drug traffickers obviously are making enormous profits and yet, under current law, the maximum fine for most serious drug offenses is only $25,000.

One of the major objectives of H.R. 4901 would be to increase the maximum fine for convicted drug traffickers from $25,000 to $250,000. In addition, it would establish an alternative fine concept where drug offenders can be fined up to twice their gross profits or proceeds from drug trafficking ventures in cases where the alternative fine would be greater than the fine specified for the crime itself. The bill would also establish a $10 million forfeiture fund in the Department of Justice and the U.S. Customs Service. The fund would be used to cover ever-increasing costs of forfeiture procedures, which are provided in the bill for all felony drug cases, and to provide additional resources for law enforcement activities in fiscal year 1985 through 1987.

Another important aspect of this legislation would increase the narcotics law enforcement activities of the U.S. Customs Service. This is accomplished by increasing the current level under which administrative rather than judicial forfeiture proceedings can be initiated from $10,000 to $100,000, and by removing the ceiling entirely for merchandise and conveyances which are used to import, export or store illicit substances. Such actions will result in expedited action to avoid deterioration and decreased value of seized articles, as well as the enormous cost of storage. The Secretary of the Treasury would be authorized to transfer seized or forfeited property to State or local agencies which seized or participated in the seizure of the property. Such action would greatly enhance coordination and cooperation among Federal, State and local agencies that the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, of which I am the Ranking Minority Member, has found so seriously lacking.

Finally, H.R. 4901 would increase compensation to informers from $50,000 to $250,000, while retaining the current legal limit of such payments to 25 percent of the net proceeds.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary's Subcommittee on Crime [Mr. HUGHES], for his tireless efforts in bringing this important legislation to the floor of the House. Given the epidemic proportions of drug availability and abuse in this country, forceful action is required and this legislation does just that. Narcotics Select Committee hearings held around the country and in Washington have clearly demonstrated that drug availability and drug abuse are increasing, while the price to purchase deadly drugs is decreasing. We must take strong action to punish the drug traffickers who are undermining our institutions and who prey on and profit from the misery of so many of our citizens. This legislation is a step in that direction.

I would also like to take this opportunity to remind my colleagues that increased law enforcement efforts must also be accompanied by increased funding for drug education, treatment and prevention programs, and in this regard I urge that a portion of seized drug assets be turned over to a drug education, treatment and prevention fund.

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, I rise in support of H.R. 4901, the Comprehensive Drug Penalty Act of 1984. This is an important piece of legislation deserving of support by every Member of this House who is concerned about the impact of drug abuse on their constituents.

Today the financial penalties for drug dealing are frequently only seen by dealers as a cost of doing business. Under current law, the maximum fines for many serious drug offenses is only $25,000. A major purpose of H.R. 4901 is to increase the use of forfeiture proceedings and criminal finds to attack the phenomenal financial base of the drug trade.

H.R. 4901 contains several salutary provisions designed to increase the penalties imposed on drug traffickers, including the following:

Substantially increases the maximum permissible criminal fines in drug cases, generally tenfold from $25,000 to $250,000, and establishes a new alternative fine concept under drug offenders can be fined up to twice their gross profits or proceeds from drug trafficking where the alternative fine would be greater than the fine specified for the crime itself.

Provides criminal forfeiture provisions in all felony drug cases.

Establishes a $10 million forfeiture fund in the Department of Justice and the U.S. Customs Service to help defray escalating costs associated with forfeiture procedures and provide additional resources to be used for law enforcement in fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987.

Creates a permissive presumption in criminal cases that all property acquired by drug offenders during the period of the violations or shortly thereafter is subject to forfeiture if no other likely source for such property exists.

The U.S. Customs Service plays an important role in the enforcement of U.S. narcotics laws. Title II of H.R. 4901 contains provisions designed to increase the drug enforcement effectiveness of the Customs Service.

Under current law, judicial forfeiture proceedings must be used in all cases where the value of the seized property exceeds $10,000, even though most cases are uncontested. This results in significant delays of up to 2 years during which time the seized property frequently deteriorates resulting in a substantial decrease in value. H.R. 4901 authorizes the use of administrative rather than judicial forfeiture proceedings in many more cases by increasing the current administrative ceiling from $10,000 to $100,000 for most articles, and by removing the ceiling entirely for prohibited merchandise and conveyances which are used to import, export, transport, or store any controlled substance.

H.R. 4901 also provides authority for the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer seized or forfeited property to State or local law enforcement agencies for forfeiture under appropriate State law or transfer property already forfeited to any State or local law enforcement agency which participated directly in the seizure of the property. Appropriate use of this provision can go a long way toward promoting timely cooperation among Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies, which is so essential to effective drug investigations and prosecutions.

Finally, the bill increases the maximum level of compensation which can be paid to informers from $50,000 to $250,000. The current requirement limiting such payments to 25 percent of the net proceeds recovered is retained. I support inclusion of this provision in H.R. 4901 because informants often provide information without which drug traffickers could not be convicted. This is often done at great risk to the informant's personal safety. It is appropriate for the Government to recognize this fact by paying a substantial reward for useful information, where the facts of a particular case merit it.

Drug trafficking is a $100 billion-a-year business in America. I commend Chairman HUGHES of the Judiciary Crime Subcommittee and Chairman GIBBONS of the Ways and Means Trade Subcommittee for their work on H.R. 4901. I support H.R. 4901 because it provides law enforcement agencies with effective new tools to apprehend and prosecute drug traffickers.

Although there is no provision currently in H.R. 4901 providing for it, if the asset forfeiture funds established in the bill for the Department of Justice and the Customs Service prove effective, consideration should be given to establishing a similar forfeiture fund to help finance drug abuse treatment and prevention activities.

The widespread availability of illegal drugs in the United States has created a public health problem of epidemic proportions. Over 94 percent of the States responding to a 1983 survey conducted by the National Association of State Alcohol and Drug Abuse Directors reported an unmet need for treatment and prevention services in their States. According to a recent survey by the National Association for City Drug and Alcohol Coordination, many cities report reductions in treatment and prevention services, waiting lists and gaps in services, and existing programs that are heavily overutilized.

Federal funding for drug abuse services has decreased by about 40 percent under the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Service block grant. Dedicating a portion of forfeited drug trafficking profits to underwrite the costs of treatment and prevention is one way to alleviate 3 years of harsh budget cuts which the States have been forced to endure in their drug abuse services budgets and to make the drug pusher pay for the misery he brings to others. This is an idea that deserves future consideration from the Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4901, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and to include therein extraneous material, on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

DRUG ENFORCEMENT COORDINATION ACT OF 1984

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4028) to amend the Drug Abuse Prevention, Treatment, and Rehabilitation Act to revise the authority of the Office of Drug Abuse Policy, to establish a Deputy Director for Drug Abuse Prevention and a Deputy Director for Drug Enforcement in the Office, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4028

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Drug Enforcement Coordination Act of 1984".

NATIONAL POLICY

SEC. 2. The Congress declares that it is the policy of the United States and the purpose of this Act to focus the comprehensive resources of the Federal Government and bring them to bear against all aspects of illicit drug production and trafficking and to develop and assure the implementation of a comprehensive, coordinated, long-term Federal strategy to combat all aspects of such drug production and trafficking. To reach these goals, the Congress further declares that it is the policy of the United States and the purpose of this Act to meet the problems of illicit drug production and trafficking through—

(1) coordination of drug enforcement efforts of all Federal law enforcement agencies and agencies with resources, capabilities, and responsibilities that can complement or assist law enforcement agencies;

(2) cooperation with and sharing of drug enforcement intelligence with State and local law enforcement agencies;

(3) coordination of all international, multilateral, and bilateral efforts to suppress drug trafficking, to control cultivation of crops that are, or are the raw materials for, controlled substances, and to control precursor chemicals and other chemicals essential for the manufacture and processing of controlled substances; and

(4) increased cooperation among nations in carrying out the Single Convention on Narcotics, the Convention on Psychotropic Substances, and any other international effort to control the traffic and abuse of controlled substance.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For purposes of this Act:

(1) The term "drug enforcement" means—
(A) any of the following law enforcement activities:

(i) the investigation and prosecution of drug offenses and other investigations and prosecutions of individuals involved in drug offenses,

(ii) programs or activities involving international narcotics control,

(iii) the detection and suppression of illicit drug production and trafficking;

(B) the interdiction of the illicit commerce in controlled substances wherever it may occur;

(C) the suppression and eradication of the cultivation of crops that are, or are the raw materials for, controlled substances;

(D) any activity or program by any Federal agency which can complement or assist any of the law enforcement activities described in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C); or

(E) the conduct of formal or informal diplomatic or international negotiations at any level, whether with foreign governments, other foreign governmental or nongovernmental persons or organizations of any kind, or any international organization of any kind, relating to traffic (whether licit or illicit) in drugs subject to abuse, or any measures to control or curb such traffic;

(2) The term "drug" means a controlled substance as that term is defined by section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act.

OFFICE OF DRUG ENFORCEMENT COORDINATION

SEC. 4. (a)(1) There is established in the Executive Office of the President the Office of Drug Enforcement Coordination which shall be headed by a Director appointed by the President. The President may appoint the Vice President to be the Director. Any other appointment to the office of Director shall be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The President may direct the Director to represent the Government of the United States in discussions and negotiations relating to drug enforcement.

(2) Unless the Director is the Vice President, the Director shall be compensated at the rate of pay in effect for level II of the Executive Schedule.

(b) In carrying out section 6 the Director may employ and prescribe the functions of such officers and employees, including attorneys, as are necessary to perform the functions vested in him by such section.

(c) The location of the Office in the Executive Office of the President shall not be construed to limit in any manner access by the Congress or committees of either House (1) to information, documents, and studies in the possession of, or conducted by or at the direction of the Director, or (2) to Office personnel.

COORDINATION OF FEDERAL EFFORT

SEC. 5. (a) The Director shall—

(1) establish policies, objectives, and priorities for Federal drug enforcement;

(2) annually promulgate a strategy, in accordance with section 7, for coordinated Federal drug enforcement;

(3) coordinate and oversee the performance of drug enforcement functions by Federal departments and agencies to insure the implementation of the policies, objectives, and priorities established under paragraph (1) and the fulfillment of their responsibilities under the strategy promulgated under paragraph (2);

(4) make such recommendations to the President respecting—

(A) changes in the organization, management, and budgets of Federal departments and agencies engaged in drug enforcement, and

(B) the allocation of personnel to and within such departments and agencies.

as the Director determines are appropriate to implement the policies, priorities, and objectives established under paragraph (1) and the strategy promulgated under paragraph (2);

(5) consult with and assist State and local governments respecting their relations with Federal departments and agencies in the performance of drug enforcement; and

(6) submit to Congress a report, within 60 days of the end of each fiscal year, which shall specify the objectives, nature, and results of the drug enforcement activities undertaken by the Director in the preceding fiscal year, include the current strategy, and account for the funds expended under the Act.

(b) To carry out subsection (a), the Director shall—

(1) review the regulations, guidelines, requirements, criteria, and procedures of Federal departments and agencies applicable to the performance of drug enforcement;

(2) conduct, or provide for, evaluations of (A) the performance of drug enforcement by Federal departments and agencies, and (B) the results achieved by such departments and agencies in the performance of such enforcement;

(3) review the annual budgets submitted to the Office of Management and Budget for the Federal departments and agencies engaged in drug enforcement and make recommendations to the President respecting such budgets before they are submitted to the Congress; and

(4) review the allocation of personnel to and by such departments and agencies.

(c) Federal departments and agencies engaged in drug enforcement shall submit to the Director such information and reports as may reasonably be required to carry out this section.

STRATEGY

SEC. 6. (a) The strategy promulgated under section 5(a)(2) shall contain—

(1) an analysis of the nature, character, and extent of illicit drug trafficking and production in and affecting the United States,

(2) a comprehensive plan, with respect to Federal drug enforcement, which shall specify the objectives of the strategy and how all available resources, funds, programs, services, and facilities authorized under relevant Federal law should be used; and

(3) an analysis and evaluation of the major programs conducted, expenditures made, results achieved, plans developed, and problems encountered in the operation and coordination of the various Federal drug enforcement functions.

(b) To facilitate the preparation of the strategy under section 5(a)(2), the Director shall—

(1) engage in the planning necessary to develop the objectives for a comprehensive, coordinated long-term strategy, including examination of the overall Federal investment to combat illicit drug production and trafficking;

(2) require departments and agencies engaged in Federal drug enforcement to submit such information and reports and to conduct such studies and surveys as are necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act, and the departments and agencies shall submit to the Director the information, reports, studies, and surveys so required; and

(3) evaluate the performance and results achieved by Federal drug enforcement and the prospective performance and results that might be achieved by programs and activities in addition to or in lieu of those currently being administered.

ACCEPTANCE OF UNCOMPENSATED SERVICES

SEC. 7. In carrying out section 6, the Director may accept and employ in furtherance of the purpose of such section voluntary and uncompensated services notwithstanding section 1342 of title 31 of the United States Code.

NOTICE RELATING TO THE CONTROL OF DANGEROUS DRUGS

SEC. 8. Whenever the Attorney General determines that there is evidence that—

(1) a drug or other substance, which is not a controlled substance, has a potential for abuse, or

(2) a controlled substance should be transferred or removed from a schedule under section 202 of the Controlled Substances Act, he shall, prior to initiating any proceeding under section 201(a) of such Act, give the Director timely notice of such determination. Information forwarded to the Attorney General pursuant to section 201(f) of such Act shall also be forwarded by the Secretary of Health and Human Services to the Director.

STATUTORY AUTHORITY UNAFFECTED

SEC. 9. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to limit the authority of the Secretary of Defense with respect to the operation of the Armed Forces.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 10. There is authorized to be appropriated for the Office of Drug Enforcement Coordination $500,000 for fiscal year 1985 and $500,000 for fiscal year 1986.

TECHNICAL

SEC. 11. (a) The Drug Abuse Prevention, Treatment, and Rehabilitation Act is repealed.

(b)(1) Section 5313 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following: "Director, Office of Drug Enforcement Coordination."

(2) Section 5314 of such title is amended by striking out "Director of the Office of Drug Abuse Policy."

(3) Section 5315 of such title is amended by striking out "Deputy Director of the Office of Drug Abuse Policy."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might need.

Mr. Speaker, the dimensions of our attack on drug production and trafficking, everywhere it occurs, are enormous. It results from the efforts of more than 17 agencies of the Federal Government, at a cost to the taxpayers this year of more than $1.2 billion.

Last week, Bud Mullen, the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration, told me that 1 million Americans need treatment because they are addicted to cocaine—largely because it is so easy to get. We are failing to control the flow of cocaine into the United States and since 1981, the price of cocaine has dropped through the floor.

Heroin, which we know causes thousands of serious crimes, is at the same high levels of availability that it was at 6 or 7 years ago. Mexican brown heroin is available again in New York City after a long absence. Here, too, our enforcement efforts are failing.

Every day, millions of doses of other powerful and dangerous drugs, manufactured in underground laboratories or diverted from medical sources, are sold in the black market of drugs found on street corners and in suburban malls. Once again our enforcement efforts are a failure.

One reason for our lack of success is that the 17 agencies involved in drug enforcement are not working together.

Everyone knows that a winning football team has someone who writes up the plays, and scopes out the plays of the opposing teams. Well, our current drug enforcement strategy is about as sophisticated as a football team that makes up its plays on the field, drawing X's and O's in the dirt.

Right now, no one is developing realistic objectives for our 17 agency drug enforcement team, and the General Accounting Office has repeatedly found that our team is fragmented and not working together.

Basic, accurate management information is not available about costs or the performance of the programs. GAO found in one audit, for example, that the quantity of drugs seized by Customs, the Coast Guard, and DEA had been overstated by 50 percent.

Decisions seem to be made without regard to the overall effort. For example, the Customs Service planned to cut 1,000 of its inspectors and to eliminate its aerial surveillance of drug smugglers operating off our shores until Congress protested.

In response to growing recognition of the need for the kind of centralized coordination and direction of our drug enforcement efforts called for in this bill, the administration established what it calls the National Narcotics Border Interdiction System [NNBIS]. However, rather than providing such leadership to mediate and resolve agency turf battles which cripple our overall effort, NNBIS seems to merely add another competitor into the struggle to see who gets credit when an arrest or seizure is made. Here's what Bud Mullen, Administrator of DEA, said about NNBIS a few months ago in memo to the Attorney General recommending that it be passed out.

The grandiose claims of the National Narcotics Border Interdiction System (NNBIS) are beginning to discredit and devalue the efforts of the administration's numerous drug control programs. False credit claimed by NNBIS spokesmen demoralizes the personnel working for a number of Federal agencies whose bona fide accomplishments either go unrecognized or are relegated to second place by the unwise overemphasis on NNBIS and the South Florida Task Force Interdiction Programs.

Mr. Mullen goes on to report that the self-aggrandizing claims of NNBIS are not only demoralizing our operational frontline drug enforcement troops, but they are confusing foreign law enforcement leaders whose cooperation is essential to stopping drugs in the source countries. He gives accounts of visits of NNBIS officials to Mexico, Canada, and the Bahamas which left leaders in these countries puzzled about who represented the United States in narcotics matters and wondering if there is any coordination of our efforts taking place.

The crisis of drug abuse and our disorganized response, are why we need this legislation. This bill establishes in the Executive Office of the President a Director of drug enforcement coordination. The Director shall develop a comprehensive strategy for drug enforcement that spells out the proper role of each of the agencies involved. The Director is to oversee the performance of each agency. If an agency is not meeting its performance standards, the Director shall recommend to the President changes the Director believes are warranted such as changes in management, in personnel, in organization, or in budgets.

The Director will not have direct operational authority, but the Director will have the clout of speaking directly to and for the President.

We need a strong hand at the reins because right now the Drug Enforcement team is worse than a team of horses running out of control—it is a loose herd of 17 agencies, with a history of bureaucratic turf battles, that will not be easily harnessed.

Without a strategy, and without strong, central leadership, when we send our dedicated law enforcement officers to fight the drug traffickers, we betray their dedication, and I suggest, we betray the American people who demand that we effectively address the problem of drug trafficking and crime.

This bill has broad bipartisan support, in the Judiciary Committee, and the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control. I urge the House to adopt this bill and keep faith with our Nation's law enforcement officers, with our young people, and with our families. We must turn the tide against the drug traffic, and effective drug enforcement coordination is absolutely necessary to do it.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the distinguished gentleman from Florida, Mr. CHARLES BENNETT, who is not a member of the Judiciary Committee—he is on the Armed Services Committee; in fact, he is chairman of the Subcommittee on Seapower—for his great assistance, and I also want to thank the gentleman from Florida, Mr. CLAY SHAW, a very valued member of the Judiciary Committee, for his yeoman work on this particular legislation. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] introduced legislation in the early days of the 98th Congress that was directed to this issue. He has been in the forefront of crafting this bill through the entire process.

Once again my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. HAL SAWYER, has done yeoman work on this legislation. This is a bill that we worked on since the closing days of the 98th Congress, and he is one of the principal architects of this legislation for a so-called drug czar or Office of Drug Policy.

The chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. PETER RODINO, has also been extremely cooperative and helpful to us in our efforts to come up with a strong bill.

This bill has broad bipartisan support. It is a bill that we need to pull all the various agencies together to move in one direction.

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that we will have a good bipartisan vote for what I consider to be an important measure to provide a new direction for our law enforcement team in the fight against drug trafficking.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1330

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, I urge this body's support for H.R. 4028, a bill that I believe will contribute substantially to our drug enforcement program. During the current administration, we have seen a budgetary increase for law enforcement, the successful south Florida task force, the expansion of the south Florida prototype across the Nation, the new national narcotics border interdiction system, and the use of the military under this body's posse comitatus legislation.

These improvements, however, are implemented by the FBI and DEA in the Department of Justice, the Customs Service in the Department of Treasury, the Coast Guard, which is part of the Department of Transportation, and the Department of Defense. For obvious reasons, we have a coordination problem that is interfering with our drug enforcement. The concept of a Drug Enforcement Director, or czar, as it has been pegged, is designed to improve coordination by creating one key official with authority to coordinate the various Federal efforts and manage drug enforcement, in general.

As an example of this is the present Vice President. Vice President BUSH directs the successful south Florida task force and now the border system from a position of unique authority and with the help of an expert staff. Following this example, CLAY SHAW of Florida introduced a bill to implement the coordinator concept for all drug enforcement. The chairman of our subcommittee also introduced a bill, and the committee, based on these proposals, adopted the bill before us today. I urge you to support H.R. 4028.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO].

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4028, the Drug Enforcement Coordination Act. This measure is designed to control the chaos that exists among the 17 different agencies that are now involved in drug enforcement activities. Three times in the last 10 years the General Accounting Office has examined our drug enforcement program and found that it is severely handicapped by a lack of strong, central oversight. There is little coordination of efforts among the numerous law enforcement agencies involved in narcotics control and no comprehensive strategy for our "war on drugs."

While millions of Americans suffer as a result of the scourge of drug trafficking and criminal problems associated with drug abuse grow, the existing bureaucratic inefficiency and waste is inexcusable. Congress has three times in the last 10 years tried to get the executive branch to undertake coherent planning and oversight of drug control efforts. Only limited success has been achieved in immobilizing high-level drug traffickers and only small inroads have been made in reaching and eliminating foreign sources of the drug trade. The availability of drugs continues to increase in this country. The front pages of many newspapers recently have been filled with articles on our serious drug control problems, particularly focusing on the lack of effective international narcotics control.

The bill that is before us today would provide a much-needed focus and direction to our national drug control efforts by establishing a director to coordinate and review the policies and goals of each of the law enforcement agencies, determine whether they are consistent with the overall enforcement program, and ensure that money is spent where the best results can be achieved. Unbelievably, right now, no one in the administration has that responsibility.

Regrettably, the President vetoed an anticrime package passed by both Houses of Congress in 1982 which contained somewhat similar provisions to establish strong, centralized leadership in our fight against drug abuse. Numerous hearings and investigations by the Congress have strongly demonstrated the critical need for someone to look at the entire drug enforcement mission—whether it is domestic investigations, border and high seas interdiction, crop eradication programs in other countries, or other international narcotics control programs—to determine what the relative priorities and chances of success between them are, and advise the President how best to allocate the very scarce resources that we have.

For example, far too little has been done to convince drug-producing countries that we view their efforts to control the illicit production and distribution of drugs as an essential element in our relationship with them. In my opinion, the problem of international drug control must receive a higher priority on our foreign policy agenda. In many Congresses, I have both authored and supported measures to achieve this result, including limitations on foreign aid to countries that ignore their international narcotics control responsibilities. As a member of the President's Commission on Organized Crime, I again have emphasized the need for greater focus on controlling this aspect of the drug problem. Unless effective measures are pursued to prevent drug production and trafficking at its source, there is little chance for any real success in the war on drugs.

The Attorney General testified in congressional hearings that $1 spent on drug enforcement overseas is worth $10 spent in the United States. Yet, the General Accounting Office has pointed out that over the last 5 years international drug program expenditures have remained constant at about $60 million, while interdiction expenditures have more than tripled.

We must have greater efficiencies and planning to carefully direct how our drug enforcement dollars are spent. This bill would require the director of drug enforcement coordination to recommend a budget for the drug enforcement agencies independently of the eight Cabinet agencies involved. If implemented, the bill will give us not only our best shot at striking a blow at the heart of the drug traffic, but a chance to do it with cost effectiveness.

I urge the adoption of this measure. Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Michigan for yielding.

I think in looking at this particular piece of legislation it is important that we just for one moment review the history of how we got to where we are today. We all know the success of the South Florida Task Force, especially the success of the coordinated effort set up by President Reagan under the leadership of GEORGE BUSH who has headed up the South Florida Task Force. In doing that, we have come across some very difficult history. As the gentleman from New Jersey properly pointed out, it was because of the efforts of his subcommittee and his good efforts in this particular regard, together with the efforts of the ranking minority member on the Crime Subcommittee, that we were able last year to bring a posse comitatus bill to this floor and passed.

In passing it and putting it into coordinated effort in south Florida where it has been most successful, we did run into a great deal of resistance from the military. I recall in the Government Operations Subcommittee matter, of which I am not a member, but was requested or invited to participate in, we had some testifying from the military who actually expressed hostility to getting involved in law enforcement.

At that time I reminded him that the Vice President had been involved and also read to him a quote directly from the Vice President.

It was because of the strong leadership and this implementation that we brought about a big nick in the problem, the growing problem of law enforcement in drug trading in south Florida.

When you think of all the departments involved, and I just jotted down a few that came to my mind when I was sitting here listening to the debate: The Coast Guard, under the Department of Transportation; Customs and Firearms Control and Tobacco, under the Department of the Treasury; of course, you have Customs, which also comes under the Treasury. You have the DEA and the FBI and Justice.

The Department of Defense, of course, is a most important element to this total mix.

With this, you even have our Representative to the United Nations, and as we are finding out more and more, it is becoming the responsibility of the Secretary of State to let foreign countries know how we feel about them continuing to grow drugs and import them into this country.

This brings about a nightmare of coordination. We need someone at the highest level in the White House itself to coordinate the efforts of all these departments and someone who has also direct access to the President, as GEORGE BUSH has had over the last 3½ years.

This has brought about the success of the South Florida Task Force.

This important piece of legislation is also going to bring about great success, I believe, as a coordinator in putting together this whole picture on fighting law enforcement throughout not just the United States, but throughout the entire world.

I would say to the people of the administration who might oppose this particular bill because of some of the problems of not wanting a growing bureaucracy, I think that this type of coordination will actually save us money. It will we know keep us from spinning our wheels and having three or four agencies doing the exact same thing, continuously reinventing the wheel.

This is a very important coordinating effort and it is one that should be embraced by this House and hopefully it will be put together in a conference with the Senate's version, the version of the other body, before the 98th Congress finishes its business.

I would just like to say in the few minutes that are left that this may be the last piece of legislation—hopefully it is not. Hopefully we will see more good legislation coming out of the Crime Subcommittee. However, this may be the last time that this particular subcommittee will be managing bills coming through.

I would like to say that in the efforts of fighting crime that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER] will certainly be missed when he retires from Congress at the end of this Congress. I might say it is a retirement that he volunteered for.

I would also like to compliment the gentleman from New Jersey who has put together a team with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER] and I can say that even though occasionally all of us let partisan politics get into a particular argument, we seem to be particularly good at this, but I think that this subcommittee has singularly led the way in showing what a subcommittee in this Congress can do when we lay partisan politics aside and we work for good laws.

This is the type of politics that this Congress needs. I might say that if more subcommittees and committees of this Congress would work together the way this subcommittee has that the American people would be the ultimate benefactors.

I yield back the balance of my time. Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

First, let me just thank my distinguished colleague who is a treasure on the Judiciary Committee, who works very well with us in a bipartisan fashion and whose own experience in south Florida where we have had a major drug trafficking problem, has I think, enriched our own committee's understanding of the dimension of the problem.

I have no doubt that much of what we have turned out, particularly in this last Congress, but certainly back in the 97th Congress, came about because of the gentleman's understanding of the problem and his ability as an attorney to understand what we could do to direct our efforts to those problems.

I want to thank the gentleman for his cooperation.

I also want to thank our colleague from Florida, Mr. BENNETT, who was instrumental in moving the posse comitatus through the conference committee. I think the gentleman well knows he was not on our committee at that time but he was an observer in the conference and it was CHARLIE BENNETT, who was very tenacious to make sure that we moved to bring about the enactment of what I consider to be one of the more important measures in the 97th Congress modifying the posse comitatus law so that the military could assist justice and share intelligence gathering that they produced as they overfly the Caribbean and other parts of the country and in loaning us equipment and in providing staging areas to us. They have proved to be of invaluable benefit, and even though the military was very resistant and fought us every step of the way, tried to scuttle us at every step of the process they now love it. We hear them sing the praises of the modification of the posse comitatus law and now all of a sudden I wonder whose idea it was. It sounds like it might have been the military's idea.

No matter whose idea it was, we passed it and it has turned out to be good legislation.

The same thing is true with this measure. I am satisfied that until we bring about the kind of coordination that is envisioned in this legislation we are going to have a fragmented approach. The gentleman talked about the various agencies and branches of Government that have some piece of the action. It is not unusual to see three wiretaps being run at one time by three different agencies on one investigation because they are not talking.

We try to do something about the coordination and what we do is we set up a number of different coordinating agencies.

Listen to the number of coordinating agencies we have developed to help coordinate these 17 different agencies. We first of all have the Office of Drug Abuse Policy in the White House. Then we have the Cabinet Council on Legal Policy chaired by the Attorney General. Then we have the Narcotics Working Group chaired by the Associate Attorney General. Then we have the new Regional Drug Task Forces administered by the Justice Department. Then we have the National Narcotics Border Interdiction System headed by the Vice President.

What we need is somebody, some one person to coordinate the coordinators, and that is what it amounts to. We need a coordinator in fact, not just a coordinator as we have had.

Unfortunately, we need a coordinator in fact, not a coordinator in name. I might say to my colleagues we cannot afford to have the kind of goof-ups we have had in the last few months. It is just uncalled for. It is just inexcusable that we have personnel from NIMBUS going to Mexico, telling the Mexican authorities that they now are the contacts for this country and to have the Mexican authorities say to the Drug Enforcement Administration, who has worked with the Mexican authorities and who really is the premier agency in drug enforcement worldwide, it is not Interpol, it is our own Drug Enforcement Administration, to have those officials say to the Drug Enforcement Administration, "My God, who is in charge; who is running the drug enforcement program in this country?" That is inexcusable and it would not have happened if we had somebody like the Vice President, somebody like the Vice President in charge of the overall coordination.

So I say to my colleagues it is a good bill. If you want to coordinate these agencies and bring some degree of sense and strategy to our efforts to stem drug trafficking, this is the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to my colleague, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. I have a feeling of great gratitude for the chairman of the subcommittee and the ranking member and the other members who have spoken.

Early on it became pretty clear that there needed to be somebody in charge of the overall operation and efforts that have been made by a lot of people individually and by committees and by a lot of speeches that have been made about it, but the job has not yet been done.

I think if it is done, and we find much more progress being made, it will be because we get an overall and single leadership in this matter. That's what this bill provides for.

I want to thank the committee not only for this bill, which is a very fine bill, very much overdue, but for the other things that have happened in the last year or so in this field.

There has been a little misunderstanding about the comitatus law and about the fact that the Navy can actually make arrests. There is nothing in that law we agreed to that does not allow the Navy to make arrests. So far it has only been the Coast Guard that has been making arrests, but there is a provision in that agreement between the House and the Senate, in that conference, that said that no power that the Navy had before that agreement would be destroyed. So the Navy does have this legal right to make arrests and they should do so!

I want to thank the committee again for its fine work in this field.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I want to again compliment the gentleman in the well [Mr. BENNETT] for the assistance he has given our subcommittee and really spearheaded the posse comitatus amendment. That perhaps of all of the items that came out in the way of law enforcement out of the 97th Congress, was at the head of the list because it has really made a difference.

I have no further requests for time and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I just want to yield myself such time as I might consume.

I would like to say without the diligent work of staff, the tireless work of staff, we would not be here today. I want to thank Char Vanlier of the minority staff for her efforts on this legislation and all of the other legislation that we have put out of our subcommittee. I think we have passed something like 13 bills out of our subcommittee. This has probably been one of the most productive sessions. It has kept us busy and without the work of staff we would not be here today.

I also want to thank the chief counsel Hayden Gregory of the majority staff of the Subcommittee on Crime and Eric Sterling who worked particularly in the area of drug trafficking and has worked very diligently on this piece of legislation. Also Ed O'Connell who has worked on computer and credit card crime and other legislation. Also Jennie Sloan who worked on trademark counterfeiting in particular. Without their superb efforts we would not have been able to move these bills through the process as we have over these last 18 or 19 months.

Mr. Speaker, I have no more requests for time and I yield back the balance of my time.

● Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I oppose H.R. 4028 because I believe the only policy czar in the executive branch should be the President of the United States. This bill recognizes that coordination is needed but ignores the new programs in this administration which are now providing coordination and obviate the need for H.R. 4028.

Law Enforcement Coordinating Committee [LECC's] are now in each of the 94 U.S. attorneys' districts. These LECC's bring together Federal law enforcement priorities, to break down traditional jurisdictional barriers and to facilitate cooperation.

For the first time, the resources of the Federal Bureau of Investigation have entered into the war against illegal drugs. The FBI's manpower and the significant professional expertise of the Bureau have added vast new dimensions to the Federal arsenal being applied to this critical crime problem.

The President has established 13 regional task forces on organized drug trafficking in addition to the earlier south Florida task force. These task forces are working very significant cases against major organized crime activities; cases aimed at indicting, convicting and sentencing the top level of criminals who finance and operate the organizations that distribute illicit drugs.

The Vice President also is serving as coordinator for NNBIS, National Narcotics Border Interdiction System, a major effort involving the military as well as domestic law enforcement in a comprehensive border drug interdiction program.

These and other efforts at increased enforcement, cooperation and coordination are supervised by an interagency working group under the Cabinet Council on Legal Policy. Represented are the Departments of State, Treasury, Justice, Defense, and Transportation. Overall policy direction and coordination for the Government's efforts is provided by the Cabinet Council itself and the President.

We have made great progress minimizing historic disputes between and among the various Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies. We are achieving a new level of efficiency and cooperation. Tremendous progress is being made and we are building upon each success. A new layer of bureaucratic administration would impede that progress.

The provisions of H.R. 4028 would abridge the authority of Cabinet officers and disrupt the Cabinet system. They would isolate the policy making function from operational responsibility by removing it from those agencies which must be accountable for both policy and program decisions.

The administration is strongly opposed to H.R. 4028. Last January, the President vetoed a similar bill because drug czar provisions were included.

The premise of H.R. 4028, that effective Federal drug enforcement requires an additional bureaucratic entity with broad new authorities, is fundamentally flawed.

The Department of Justice, the White House and every Department working on drug law enforcement feels that the bureaucratic structure and confusing responsibilities proposed in H.R. 4028 would be disruptive to ongoing enforcement activities and would distract from the focused, coordinated operations currently in place.

For these reasons, I oppose H.R. 4028. It will simply serve to disrupt the efforts of drug enforcement coordination now in place. I believe these relatively new efforts are working and show great promise for the future. It would be a mistake for this body not to allow these programs to develop their full potential.

● Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 4028, the drug czar legislation, which I co-sponsored. The bill will help our drug enforcement programs by coordinating enforcement efforts.

More than anything else, drugs and crime are linked. More than one-third of all prisoners were under the influence of drugs at the time they committed the offense which put them behind bars.

As chairman of the Task Force on International Narcotics Trafficking and a member of the Crime Subcommittee, I quickly concluded that Federal antidrug programs lack effective overall coordination. No single individual in the administration supervises the various drug programs. Even the Vice President, who nominally has responsibility for drug programs—has no input into the budgetary process. If we are going to deal with the total problem, we need a single coordinating office with sufficient power and expertise to draw together the resources of the Federal Government at home and abroad. That is why the Judiciary Committee has passed legislation to establish a single antidrug coordinator in the Federal Government. The administration demonstrates its monumental hypocrisy on this issue by shrilly denouncing Congress' purported inactivity on crime, yet stonewalling this—the most effective crime-fighting legislation before Congress this term.

More than one out of every five American households suffered a rape, robbery, assault, burglary, or larceny during 1983. And more than one third of these crimes are drug related. These figures highlight the problems of innocent citizens who have become victims of crime.

We need tough legislation that strengthens enforcement of the drug laws. This bill will do that. It is time to do more than pay lip service to anti-crime programs. It is time to put together a concerted, coordinated and coherent antidrug campaign. H.R. 4028 provides the mechanism we need to launch that campaign. I urge my colleagues' support.

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4028, the Drug Enforcement Coordination Act of 1984.

This bill would establish an Office of Drug Enforcement Coordination in the Executive Office of the President. The office would be headed by a director who would be appointed by the President. The bill permits the President to appoint the Vice President to be the director of the office.

The director of the office would be responsible for coordinating all Federal drug enforcement activities including investigation and prosecution of drug traffickers, international narcotics control initiatives, interdiction of drug smuggling, and eradication of illicit drug crops. To this end, the director would be required to establish Federal drug enforcement policies and priorities, oversee the performance of drug enforcement functions by Federal agencies, make recommendations to the President concerning the allocation of resources and the organization of Federal agencies needed for effective drug enforcement, and maintain close contact with State and local drug enforcement authorities.

The bill also requires the director to prepare each year a comprehensive strategy for coordinated Federal drug enforcement. The strategy would be submitted to Congress as part of an annual report the director is required to file.

To carry out his responsibilities, the director is empowered to review agency budget and personnel requests submitted to the Office of Management and Budget. The director may also require Federal departments to submit such information and reports as are reasonably required for the director to perform his duties.

It is hardly necessary to spell out for the Members of this body the overwhelming magnitude of the illicit drug trade affecting this country and the awesome social and economic costs we bear as a result. Despite the massive onslaught we face from the producers and distributors of illegal drugs, our Nation's drug enforcement efforts are fragmented among a multitude of departments, agencies, cabinet councils, committees, working groups, and task forces. There is no focal point within the executive branch for determining policies, setting priorities, and assessing the resources that are needed to carry out an effective drug enforcement program. There is not even any central review of agency budgets to assure that the resources requested for drug enforcement are consistent with an overall plan to attack the drug trade.

Because the responsibility for drug enforcement coordination is dispersed throughout the executive branch, there is also no accountability to Congress. As chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, I have repeatedly asked administration witnesses who is in charge of drug policy. Unfortunately, it seems that no one is in charge.

The purpose of H.R. 4028 is to assure that there is a single, high-level official in the executive branch with the clear mandate and the authority to develop a comprehensive drug enforcement plan and coordinate the implementation of this plan. Creation of the Office of Drug Enforcement Coordination, as contained in H.R. 4028, will provide coherence and direction to our Nation's drug enforcement program. It will also assure greater accountability for results and strengthen congressional oversight of drug enforcement activities. The Office of Drug Enforcement Coordination will not be merely another layer of bureaucracy; rather, it will help cut through the confusing and overlapping array of coordinating bodies this administration has established, which have only served to fragment and conceal responsibility for drug policies.

While I support enactment of H.R. 4028, I do have some serious concerns about the bill. By incorporating and strengthening in H.R. 4028 only the supply control provisions of the Drug Abuse Prevention, Treatment and Rehabilitation Act, this bill fails to sustain the congressional policy that has guided the Federal effort to combat drug abuse and drug trafficking since 1972. That policy recognizes that efforts to reduce the supply of drugs and efforts to reduce the demand for drugs are interrelated and calls for the development and implementation of a comprehensive, coordinated, long-term Federal strategy to combat all aspects of the drug abuse problem. While many of the Federal Government's efforts in the area of drug abuse treatment and prevention have been consolidated in the Department of Health and Human Services, a number of other agencies continue to have significant responsibilities for demand reduction including ACTION, the Department of Education, the Department of Transportation and the Department of Defense. Even our law enforcement agencies such as the Drug Enforcement Administration are involved in drug abuse prevention activities. Drug abuse treatment and prevention require the same high-level attention and coordination that H.R.

4028 would provide for our law enforcement, interdiction and international narcotics control activities.

Notwithstanding these concerns, I support H.R. 4028 because of the pressing need to strengthen the coordination among the many agencies responsible for drug law enforcement. I hope it will be possible to address the demand side of the equation at a later time. ●

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the revised H.R. 4028, the Drug Enforcement Coordination Act of 1984, creating the Office of Drug Enforcement Coordination within the Executive Office of the President [EOP] with a Director who would be responsible for formulating a comprehensive Federal drug enforcement strategy.

Under this measure, the duties of the Director would include establishing objectives and priorities for Federal drug enforcement, coordinating and overseeing the performance of Federal drug enforcement departments and agencies, recommending to the President changes in the organization, management, budget, and personnel of Federal departments involved in narcotics enforcement, and consulting with State and local governments regarding their relations with Federal drug enforcement agencies. The Director would also submit a report to the Congress each year detailing the Director's activities, including the current Federal drug enforcement strategy.

While I support establishing an office within the EOP, I believe that it is essential for us to pass legislation creating a position that has more responsibility, including the responsibility for drug prevention, treatment and rehabilitation functions. That is one reason why I cosponsored the original H.R. 4028, informally known as the "drug czar" bill, which was designed to pull together all aspects of narcotics trafficking and drug abuse under one individual who would have direct access to the President and who would be in charge of formulating and coordinating a Federal drug abuse strategy—a strategy that would include drug law enforcement and drug prevention, treatment and rehabilitation functions. The original H.R. 4028 called for creating an Office of Drug Abuse Policy [ODAP] within the President's Executive Office headed by a Director, and a Deputy Director for Drug Abuse Prevention and a Deputy Director for Drug Enforcement.

Under the revised H.R. 4028, the Office of Drug Abuse Policy, currently headed by Dr. Carlton Turner, would be abolished. Although the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, of which I am the ranking minority member, has repeatedly urged a more active and responsive role for this office, abolishing ODAP rather than revising its authority, as the original H.R. 4028 had proposed, leaves no one in charge within the President's Executive Office to formulate and coordinate a comprehensive Federal strategy for drug prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation. Rather, those functions would now be relegated if the recently House-passed H.R. 5603, the alcohol, drug abuse and mental health block grants authorization, becomes law, to an Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Strategy Council located in the Department of Health and Human Services. The critical question now becomes: Who is in charge of the preventing and controlling drug abuse in our Nation? Unfortunately, the revised version of H.R. 4028 leaves us with a fragmented answer.

Mr. Speaker, what concerns me is that the drug prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation aspects of the narcotics problem will be neglected within the Executive Office of the President. One of the reasons that the "drug czar" concept found such popularity among the members of the select committee was that the scattered and half-hearted approach to prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation presently exercised by our Federal agencies necessitated the creation of a position of "drug czar" to direct and coordinate all aspects of the narcotics problem. We now face a "catch as catch can" approach to the drug prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation at a time when drug abuse and the availability of narcotics, especially cocaine, are rising.

I hope that the creation of a Director of Drug Enforcement Coordination will prove to be a positive development in our "war" on drugs, as enforcement has become our last resort in the ever-escalating battle that our Nation is now fighting. However, I also hope that as we focus our attention on the enforcement aspects of the narcotics problem, that we will not neglect drug prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation that is so critical to our Nation's efforts to win the war on narcotics trafficking and drug abuse.

Mr. Speaker, although I am disappointed in the major features of the revised H.R. 4028, I do support this measure since I believe that half a loaf of constructive legislation is better than none at all. In this regard, I also want to commend the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary's Subcommittee on Crime [Mr. HUGHES], who is also a member of the Narcotics Select Committee, for his tireless and dedicated efforts in shepherding a "drug czar" proposal, albeit a modified "czar," to the floor of the House. This task has not been easy for him and I am confident that he, too, would have preferred to see an all encompassing

"drug czar" who would formulate and coordinate a comprehensive Federal strategy to prevent and control drug trafficking and drug abuse.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FRANK). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4028, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish an Office of Drug Enforcement Coordination to coordinate Federal efforts to combat illicit drug production and trafficking, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUPREME COURT MANDATORY APPELLATE JURISDICTION REFORM ACT OF 1984

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5644) to provide greater discretion to the Supreme Court in selecting the cases it will review, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KINDNESS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER].

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. This bill (H.R. 5644) unanimously passed the House last Congress under the sponsorship of Mr. Rallsback. During the 2 years that have intervened, reasons for final enactment have grown rather than diminished.

This bill substantially eliminates the mandatory or obligatory jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Under current law, certain cases may be appealed directly to the Supreme Court and the Court is obligated to hear and decide those cases. In most instances, these cases do not involve important issues of Federal constitutional law or conflicts in the interpretation of statutes by the circuit courts of appeals. The net effect of the bill is to convert the method of Supreme Court review to a discretionary, certiorari approach.

This change in appellate review is supported by all nine Justices of the Supreme Court. As stated in a letter of June 17, 1982 to me, they clearly state: "... we write to express our complete support for the proposals ... substantially to eliminate the Supreme Court's mandatory jurisdiction."

The nine Justices further observe that mandatory cases permit litigants to require cases to be decided by the Supreme Court regardless of the importance of the issue presented or its impact on the general public. With limited time and resources at its disposal, "... it is impossible for the Court to give plenary consideration to all the mandatory appeals it receives. ... The Court must resort to summary dispositions that sometimes treat litigants in a cavalier way. Even though the summary dispositions of the Court are binding on the lower Federal courts and State courts, such decisions, in the Court's own words, 'sometimes create more confusion than they seek to resolve.'

The bill, in addition to being supported by the nine Justices, has been endorsed by the administration, the Judicial Conference of the United States, and the American Bar Association. The bill has its legislative roots deeply set in the American Law Institute's "Study of the Division of Jurisdiction Between State and Federal Courts" (1969), the "Report of the Study Group on the Caseload of the Supreme Court" (1971), the Department of Justice's "Report on the Needs of the Federal Courts" (1977), and my subcommittee's lengthy hearings on "The State of the Judiciary and Access to Justice" (1977) and "Supreme Court Workload" (1983).

There is no known opposition and the bill entails no cost to the Government.

Mr. Speaker, for a more in-depth examination of the proposed legislation, I refer Members to the House Report (No. 98-986) that has been filed. The report provides a lengthy background statement about the current statutory scheme and changes made to it by H.R. 5644.

I urge an "aye" vote on H.R. 5644.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5644, the Supreme Court Mandatory Appellate Jurisdiction Reform Act of 1984.

This legislation, which originated in the 95th Congress and has been enacted at different times by both Houses of Congress, eliminates the mandatory or obligatory jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. This change in appellate review is supported by all nine Justices of the Supreme Court. As their letter of June 18, 1982, points out:

It is impossible for the Court to give plenary consideration to all the mandatory appeals it receives, ... to have done so during the 1980 term would have required at least nine additional weeks of oral argument or a seventy-five percent increase in the argument calendar.

Moreover, even though the summary dispositions of the Court are binding on the lower Federal courts and State courts, such decisions, according to the Court, "sometimes create more confusion than they seek to resolve."

The major shortcoming of the current system is that the Supreme Court is required to decide on the merits of cases of no special importance because they happen to fall within the categories which qualify for review by appeal under the current statutes. For example, 28 U.S.C. § 1254(2) authorizes appeal by a party relying on a State statute held to be invalid on Federal grounds by a Federal court of appeals. The notion of a "statute" in this provision applies to municipal ordinances and administrative orders, and it suffices if a State law is held to be invalid as applied. Obviously, the more time the Court must devote to cases of this type which are not of great importance either to the individual States or to the Nation, the less time it has to spend on more significant cases. H.R. 5644 would rectify this situation in a manner consistent with the intent of the Judiciary Act of 1925 to give the Supreme Court discretion to select those cases it deems most important, by eliminating the Court's mandatory jurisdiction. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues' support for this important court reform measure.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO].

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5644, the "Supreme Court Mandatory Jurisdiction Reform Act of 1984."

The U.S. Supreme Court occupies a unique place in our constitutional scheme of government. Created by article III of the Constitution, the Supreme Court sits at the apex of the American legal system.

One of the principal functions of the Supreme Court is to resolve cases involving principles the application of which are of wide public importance or governmental interest, and which should be authoritatively decided by a final arbiter. Another function is to ensure uniformity and consistency in the law by resolving conflicts in decisions between or among trial courts or lower appellate courts.

The High Court can devote plenary consideration only to about 150 cases a year. During the past several terms, a substantial percentage of the Court's workload has been devoted to mandatory cases that do not have significant public importance. Elimination of these cases from the Court's docket will not preclude High Court consideration of cases of significant import to the Nation, will not have a deleterious impact on litigants, and will not adversely affect separation of powers or federalism.

Mr. Speaker, I have heard the pleas of eight Justices of the Supreme Court, and other observers, that the Court's workload is at the saturation point. Elimination of the Court's mandatory jurisdiction, although not a panacea to the Court's problems, is a necessary first step in relieving the Court's calendar crisis. As observed by Justice William Brennan in a recent Judicature article: "Congress could afford the Court substantial assistance by repealing to the maximum extent possible the Court's mandatory appellate jurisdiction and shifting these cases to the discretionary certiorari docket."

I applaud the work of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] in bringing this proposal before the full House. Hopefully, the measure will be passed by the other body and signed by the President before the end of this Congress.

I urge an "aye" vote.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself just enough time to thank and compliment the Members of the subcommittee who over a period of years worked on this subject to produce the bill before us today.

● Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5644, the Supreme Court Mandatory Appellate Jurisdiction Reform Act of 1984. This important court reform initiative has the support of the administration, the Judicial Conference, all nine Justices of the U.S. Supreme Court, and the American Bar Association. In fact, there has been no opposition to this proposal since its initial introduction in the 95th Congress. I would like to note that last Congress, this legislation was introduced in the House as H.R. 6872 by my former colleague from Illinois, Mr. Rallsback, who, during his 16 years in Congress, made many significant contributions in the area of court reform.

H.R. 5644 substantially eliminates the mandatory or obligatory jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Under current law, certain cases may be appealed directly to the Supreme Court, and the Court is obligated to hear and decide those cases. In most instances, these cases do not involve important issues of Federal constitutional law. Rather, the categories of cases defined by the existing appeal provisions are essentially arbitrary. The new effect of H.R. 5644 is to convert the method of Supreme Court review to a discretionary rather than a mandatory approach.

The need for this legislation is heightened by the ever-increasing caseload of the Supreme Court. In all, eight of the nine Supreme Court Justices have recently made public statements on the workload of the Supreme Court and the need to do something about it. While H.R. 5644 may not be the final answer to addressing the burgeoning workload of the Supreme Court, it is certainly a significant first step that I urge my colleagues to support.●

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5644, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 5644, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL COURTS CIVIL PRIORITIES ACT

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5645) to permit courts of the United States to establish the order of hearing for certain civil matters, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5645

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Federal Courts Civil Priorities Act".

ESTABLISHMENT OF PRIORITY OF CIVIL ACTIONS

SEC. 2. (a) Chapter 111 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 1657. Priority of civil actions

"(a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, each court of the United States shall determine the order in which civil actions are heard and determined, except that the court shall expedite the consideration of any action brought under chapter 153 or section 1826 of this title, any action for temporary or preliminary injunctive relief, or any other action if good cause therefor is shown. For purposes of this subsection, 'good cause' is shown if a right under the Constitution of the United States or a Federal statute (including rights under section 552 of title 5) would be maintained in a factual context that indicates that a request for expedited consideration has merit.

"(b) The Judicial Conference of the United States may modify the rules adopted by the courts to determine the order in which civil actions are heard and determined, in order to establish consistency among the judicial circuits."

(b) The section analysis of chapter 111 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"1657. Priority of civil actions."

AMENDMENTS TO OTHER LAWS

SEC. 3. The following provisions of law are amended:

EFFECTIVE DATE

Sec. 4. The amendments made by this Act shall not apply to cases pending on the date of the enactment of this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KINDNESS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER].

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the House has before it H.R. 5645, a bill to restructure the way in which the Federal courts prioritize the cases before them. This bill has the support of the administration, the Judicial Conference of the United States, the American Bar Association and the Association of the Bar of the city of New York.

The basic purpose of this bill is to create an orderly system of civil priorities. Under current Federal law there are over 80 types of civil cases which must receive expedited treatment. It is clearly impossible for each of these categories of cases to be first—at the same time. The reason the courts have been presented with this chaotic mix of inconsistent directions is the inability of Congress to rationalize competing interests. Each time a committee passes out a new Federal cause of action it believes that those cases should be given a priority. This ad hoc type of development is incoherent and impossible to follow.

The bill repeals virtually all the existing civil priorities and creates a general rule. The general rule is that cases involving liberty such as habeas corpus or collateral review cases shall be given priority. In addition, Federal courts shall give priority to applications for temporary or preliminary injunctive relief. Finally, the courts may grant a priority status to other cases for good cause shown. This last provision is designed to permit the courts to sort out important cases from the frivolous. Not all civil cases contain the same intrinsic merit, even those brought under important Federal statutes. In sum, we trust Federal judges to decide cases on the merits; the least we can do is to trust them to set their own calendar within these general confines.

I do not believe there is any controversy about this bill; it passed the House unanimously last Congress and it is without opposition this Congress.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the members of other committees of this House will pay some attention to H.R. 5645 and hopefully not report to this House in the future bills to set up a lot of new civil case priorities. It tends to have happened in a piecemeal fashion over the years.

I would like to commend the chairman and members of the Courts Subcommittee for their excellent work on H.R. 5645, the Federal Courts Civil Priorities Act, which would permit courts of the United States to establish the order of hearing for certain civil cases. The legislation accomplishes the objective basically by repealing most of the statutory provisions that require the expediting of civil cases in the Federal courts.

Now lately we have had a rush of provisions in other legislation to try to establish Federal causes of action, Federal civil actions. That is another thing, another fad, just like the civil priorities that have been established over a period of time and that this bill seeks to wipe out so that we can have an orderly way of dealing with civil litigation in the Federal courts.

The need to bring some semblance of order to the vast array of civil priorities that are spread throughout the United States Code, from title 2 to title 49, is well documented. The Department of Justice in their testimony before the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties and the Administration of Justice accurately observed that:

These provisions have been enacted in a piecemeal fashion over the years with no attention to their cumulative impact on the courts and no effort to create an integrated, internally consistent set of instructions that can be effectively implemented by the courts. Thus, for instance, there are a number of provisions which require the court to hear particular categories of cases before all others, but no indication of how conflicts between such categorical priorities are to be resolved.

So, in other words, everything becomes first.

The current situation of unreconciled civil priorities led the Association of the Bar of the city of New York to conclude in their report on "The Impact of Civil Expediting provisions of the U.S. Courts of Appeals," that " * * * it becomes impossible to comply literally with the statutory requirements." H.R. 5645 effectively addresses this problem by revoking all but the most necessary expediting provisions, such as habeas corpus, and replaces them with a single standard which the courts can apply to all cases to determine the need for expedition.

This is as it should be.

H.R. 5645 is needed and important legislation that I urge my colleagues to actively support.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER], a member of the subcommittee.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5645, the Federal Courts Civil Priorities Act. This bill recognizes that the courts are in the best position to determine which particular cases need to be expedited on their docket. The courts, after weighing the relative needs of various cases on their dockets, can then establish an order of hearing that treats all litigants fairly.

The bill would retain priority status for only three types of cases: Cases involving personal liberty, cases involving requests for temporary restraining orders or preliminary injunctions, and cases where "good cause" had been shown.

I want to commend Chairman KASTENMEIER for addressing the unique nature of cases filed under the Freedom of Information Act [FOIA] and establishing it as a priority under the "good cause" clause.

The Freedom of Information Act is a major tool through which the public and the press obtain information about their Government. Such information is perishable in most cases. Prompt review of decisions denying access to Government information is critical to insure its value to the public.

I offered an amendment to H.R. 5645 during full Judiciary Committee deliberations that would have given expedited treatment to FOIA cases. The committee instead adopted a substitute offered by Chairman KASTENMEIER that defined "good cause" so that FOIA cases could be eligible for expedited treatment. The bill's report language clearly states FOIA cases' priority.

Chairman KASTENMEIER has done a great job of preserving FOIA's strength. He has insured the American public that their right to know their Government's actions is secure.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the gentlewoman for her role in the subcommittee for bringing forward the concern that the press in this country have continued ability to bring freedom of information cases in terms of the timing of cases before Federal courts. And it was in response to that concern that we placed in the bill the "good cause" language, specifically relating to section 552 of title 5, United States Code, and courts' involvement in that type of case.

So I want to commend the gentlewoman from Colorado for her role and reaffirm that what she says is correct in terms of freedom of information cases.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin very much.

● Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5645 which would eliminate most of the existing civil priorities. Over the past 200 years various Congresses have acted in an ad hoc and random fashion to grant priority to particular and diverse types of civil cases. Unfortunately, so many expediting provisions have been added that it is impossible for the courts to intelligently categorize cases.

When this proposal was originally introduced, approximately 40 expediting provisions had been located. As a result of a further computer assisted search by the Library of Congress and Federal Judicial Center, an additional 40 priority provisions have been located.

This bill wipes the slate clean of such priorities with certain narrow exceptions. The courts are instructed under the bill to give appropriate priority to criminal cases and habeas corpus cases, because of the involvement of personal liberty. In addition, the courts are directed to give priority treatment to cases that involve either applications for temporary restraining orders or preliminary injunctions or to any other cases where good cause has been demonstrated. Moreover, because every congressional committee assumes that actions involving their jurisdiction are the most important, it is virtually impossible to reconcile competing priorities among the tens of provisions.

H.R. 5645 which is supported by the administration, the Judicial Conference, the American Bar Association, and the Bar of the city of New York represents an important court reform initiative and I urge my colleagues' support for it. ●

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FRANK). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5645, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I as unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

RECORD RENTAL AMENDMENT OF 1984

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5938) to amend title 17, United States Code, with respect to the rental, lease, or lending of sound recordings.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5938

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Record Rental Agreement of 1984".

CONDITIONS ON RENTALS

SEC. 2. Section 109 of title 17, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (b) and (c) as subsections (c) and (d), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (a) the following:

"(b)(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), unless authorized by the owners of copyright in the sound recording and in the musical works embodied therein, the owner of a particular phonorecord may not, for purposes of direct or indirect commercial advantage, dispose of, or authorize the disposal of, the possession of that phonorecord by rental, lease, or lending, or by any other act or practice in the nature of rental, lease, or lending. Nothing in the preceding sentence shall apply to the rental, lease, or lending of a phonorecord for nonprofit purposes by a nonprofit library or nonprofit educational institution.

"(2) Nothing in this subsection shall affect any provision of the antitrust laws. For purposes of the preceding sentence, 'antitrust laws' has the meaning given that term in the first section of the Clayton Act and includes section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act to the extent that section relates to unfair methods of competition.

"(3) Any person who distributes a phonorecord in violation of clause (1) is an infringer of copyright under section 501 of this title and is subject to the remedies set forth in sections 502, 503, 504, 505, and 509. Such violation shall not be a criminal offense under section 506 or cause such person to be subject to the criminal penalties set forth in section 2319 of title 18."

COMPULSORY LICENSES; ROYALTIES

SEC. 3. Section 115(c) of title 17, United States Code, is amended by redesignating paragraphs (3) and (4) as paragraphs (4) and (5), respectively, and by adding after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) A compulsory license under this section includes the right of the maker of a phonorecord of a nondramatic musical work under subsection (a)(1) to distribute or authorize distribution of such phonorecord by rental, lease, or lending (or by acts or practices in the nature of rental, lease, or lending). In addition to any royalty payable under clause (2) and chapter 8 of this title, a royalty shall be payable by the compulsory licensee for every act of distribution of a phonorecord by or in the nature of rental, lease, or lending, by or under the authority of the compulsory licensee. With respect to each nondramatic musical work embodied in the phonorecord, the royalty shall be a proportion of the revenue received by the compulsory licensee from every such act of distribution of the phonorecord under this clause equal to the proportion of the revenue received by the compulsory licensee from distribution of the phonorecord under clause (2) that is payable by a compulsory licensee under that clause and under chapter 8. The Register of Copyrights shall issue regulations to carry out the purpose of this clause."

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 4. (a) The amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) The provisions of section 109(b) of title 17, United States Code, as added by section 2 of this Act, shall not affect the right of an owner of a particular phonorecord of a sound recording, who acquired such ownership before the date of the enactment of this Act, to dispose of the possession of that particular phonorecord on or after such date of enactment in any manner permitted by section 109 of title 17, United States Code, as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) The amendments made by this Act shall not apply to rentals, leaseings, lendings (or acts or practices in the nature of rentals, leaseings, or lendings) occurring after the date which is five years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KINDNESS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER].

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today I bring to the floor H.R. 5938, the Record Rental Amendment of 1984. This bill modifies the "first sale" doctrine as embodied in section 109(a) of the Copyright Act to require authorization of the copyright owners in a sound recording before that recording may be commercially rented. It involves no cost to the Federal Government.

Under existing law, a phonorecord of a copyrighted sound recording may be commercially rented without the permission of, or compensation to, the copyright owners. According to testimony received by the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties, and the Administration of Justice, there are approximately 200 commercial record rental establishments in the United States. These establishments rent records at low cost, and frequently sell blank audio cassettes as well. One such establishment even advertised, "Never, ever buy another record."

This direct link between commercial record rental and the making of a copy of the record without the permission of or compensation to the copyright owners is the economic and policy concern behind this legislation.

The Senate has already passed a similar bill, S. 32, unanimously. The subcommittee improved on that proposal (H.R. 1027) by adding amendments exempting nonprofit schools and libraries, exempting existing inventories, adding a 5-year sunset provision, eliminating criminal penalties for infringement, and affirming the continued application of Federal antitrust laws. We also made explicit that songwriters with a copyright in a sound recording share proportionately in any royalties from rentals.

It should be noted that although the subcommittee also considered legislation (H.R. 1029) to prohibit the commercial rental of videocassettes or other audiovisual works, the bill we reported does not include this proposal and is limited to phonorecords. Nor does this bill address the issue of home taping of copyrighted works for private, noncommercial use.

H.R. 5938, a clean bill, was reported unanimously by both the subcommittee and the Committee on the Judiciary. It is supported by the administration, the Copyright Office, and a coalition of music publishers, songwriters, artists, and recording companies. It is a worthwhile proposal that deserves your support as well.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume not to exceed 3½ minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5938, relating to the rental, lease or lending of a musical record. This legislation has strong bipartisan support. A similar measure has already passed the other body (S. 32). The effect of this legislation is that unless authorized by the copyright owners, a purchaser of a particular phonorecord may not, for the purposes of direct or indirect commercial advantage, rent or lease a phonorecord to another person. Unlike the renting of a motion picture, the renting of a record is done almost exclusively for the purpose of making a copy of that music without any compensation to the copyright owner and thereby displacing a particular sale of that music. If this practice were permitted to continue and grow it would only be a matter of time before our music industry as we know it today, would be a thing of the past.

During our hearings there were a number of concerns expressed about the effect of H.R. 5938 and they were addressed by amendment in subcommittee, for example, there were witnesses who expressed concern that this legislation might permit the record industry to engage in activity contrary to existing antitrust policy. An amendment was added to make clear that nothing in this bill constitutes an expressed or implied repeal of the Federal antitrust law. This legislation would not permit copyright owners to engage in conduct that is otherwise unlawful under the antitrust law. It was also made clear in subcommittee that H.R. 5938 is not retroactive. That is to say, that a rental store owner who purchased his entire inventory prior to the effective date of this legislation will be free to commercially lend, lease, or rent that inventory without permission of the copyright owner. Also the committee believes that a 5-year sunset provision was in order. The purpose of the sunset provision is to enable the Judiciary Committee to review and reconsider the appropriateness and justification for this legislation at a later time.

Mr. Speaker, this is important legislation. The first sale doctrine was never intended to be used as a mechanism to create a second-hand rental market that would eventually replace a primary sales market or replace a traditional public performance market.

I urge your support for H.R. 5938.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS], the author of the bill.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of H.R. 5938, the Record Rental Amendment of 1984. H.R. 5938 modifies the "first sale doctrine" of the Copyright Act to protect the interests of copyright owners in sound recordings and the underlying musical composition by requiring that their consent be obtained before sound recordings could be commercially rented.

For some time, I have advocated a number of legislative proposals to bring our copyright laws, which have not always kept current with advances in technology, up to date. This bill, which I first offered as part of a broader package in 1982, is an important part of that effort.

The phenomenon of commercial record rentals is quite recent. In any one of the approximately 200 record rental stores across the country, for as little as 50 cents, a person can rent a record album, copy the album onto a cassette, and then return the record to the rental store. These stores offer to the public a way of obtaining music without having to purchase a record and subsequently without paying a cent to the creator and copyright owner of that music. The result is lost royalties to recording artists, musicians, composers, and publishers, and lost sales for retail record stores, distributors and manufacturers. The threat these stores present to the health of the recording industry and to record retailers is substantial.

The law needs to be revised so that the growing record rental problem does not add to the estimated $1.4 billion annual loss already caused by home music taping. The bill we are considering today will bring the "first sale doctrine" up to date to reflect these recent changes in technology and in the marketplace.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to thank the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties and the Administration of Justice, Mr. KASTENMEIER, for his work on this important bill. The gentleman from Wisconsin has certainly been in the forefront in urging exploration of the implications of technological change for our copyright laws. I look forward to continuing to work with him in this regard, as we strive to reconcile the needs of creators, users of new technologies and the public.

His work on the Record Rental Amendment of 1984, and that of the other subcommittee members and the fine staff, shows that careful deliberation can achieve that balance. The result is a balanced, well crafted bill which addresses fairly the needs of the creative community, the concerns of record retailers, and the public interest.

Mr. Speaker, I also congratulate and thank the distinguished ranking minority member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD] and, of course, the floor leader on the other side of the aisle for today, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KINDNESS] whose contributions to the issue have been large.

Mr. Speaker, I urge approval of this important legislation.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SAWYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I may say that this bill was a very persuasive case presented by the recording companies. On listening to similar testimony on the video tape I was not nearly as persuaded, and I think that was the general consensus of the subcommittee at the time.

This does not, and I emphasize this, address the so-called Sony case, or the interfering with anybody's private right to record in their own home for noncommercial purposes or copy a recording in their own home for noncommercial purposes. I think we make clear in our report that we did not intend to approach that question or have any impact on it.

Historically, this problem of first sale comes from the ancient English common law which prohibited the putting of alienations or restrictions on property when you sold it. They call it the restraint against alienation rule. Then it was incorporated in our copyright law in 1909, and again in another redoing of that law in 1947, and then modernized, but still substantially the same, in the 1976 copyright law.

It has become obvious after listening to the testimony that the time had come to change that and give copyright owners the protection against at least the deliberate duplication for a commercial purpose and sale of their records. I would urge full support of the bill.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Colorado, Mrs. SCHROEDER, a member of the subcommittee.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of this legislation, I am delighted to see it on the floor today. The record rental bill is noncontroversial and has enjoyed overwhelming support from the subcommittee and full committee. The Senate has already passed a separate record rental bill.

The bill simply states that under the copyright laws, prerecorded audio records and tapes may not be commercially rented unless authorized by the copyright owner. It's a bill that acknowledges the constitutional copyright principles that protect intellectual property; namely, that the payment of royalties for the use of creative property is the only method by which the creator is rewarded and provided an incentive to future creativity. That principle serves the interest of both the copyright holders and the public.

Currently, the rental record business ignores the copyright holders' right to be compensated. While record rental stores have only been recently established, there are approximately 200 commercial record rental stores. The stores rent the records for rates of $.50 to $2 per day. Blank tapes are frequently sold in the same stores. People can rent records and tape them, without compensating the copyright holder for his or her work. When one combines that with the fact that audio hometaping displaces record sales of approximately $1.4 billion annually, money that does go to the copyright holder, one can see why it is important to nip in the bud the record rental stores' abuse of the first sale doctrine.

It's the direct relationship between the commercial rental of a record and the making of a copy of the record without the permission of or compensation to the copyright owner that prompted the subcommittee to act on the legislation.

The subcommittee report and the chairman of the subcommittee have stated that the bill does not set a precedent for hometaping issues. However, one cannot overlook the important interrelationship of the two issues.

Both address the copyright holder's constitutional right to be compensated for his or her work.

Both address the economic harm of audio hometaping.

Both address the recent clash between our rapid technological advancement and the copyright laws. Copyright law must keep pace with these new technologies.

The preservation of strong copyright laws is important to the creativity that has become our country's trademark all over the world. I would like to thank Chairman KASTENMEIER for making one more step toward strengthening those laws, and urge him to continue in that tradition by examining further the issue of technology's effect on copyright and in particular the hometaping issue.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to a member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK].

Mr. FRANK. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I want to thank him for his work on this bill. This is, as the gentlewoman from Colorado has just said, a very important new area. As technology is advancing, the law has to try to keep up, and it is important that we, in a number of areas—not just this one—deal with making sure that those who have legitimate rights of ownership are protected in those rights of ownership, primarily as an incentive, as the gentlewoman has indicated.

Now, we have previously acted on legislation in the subcommittee involving protection of the design of chips, and there will be other areas where it is important that we act not in a way that restricts the flow of information, but which guarantees that the creative people in our society, whether it is in the arts, or whether it is in computer technology or elsewhere, get the kind of protection of rights of ownership which is necessary for an incentive, and, at the same time, does not stifle competition.

This piece of legislation which has received considerable work from the chairman of the subcommittee and the staff and the Members, I think reaches that goal. It protects those who have a legitimate ownership right. It does what we need to do to keep that incentive in place without stifling legitimate competition and access.

I want to stress one particular point. Many of us on the subcommittee and in the full committee and in the House, are motivated in part by our understanding of the need for proper incentive for creative people—for those who write for those who perform, for those who paint. It is sometimes portrayed, when we deal with copyright matters as if it is a handful of the owners of copyrights who are trying to extract more money from the public. I do not doubt that the owners of copyrights, like the owners of everything, want to extract money from the public. Extracting money from the public is an honorable American profession, and everyone who has a shot at it takes that shot.

But there is another side to this particular issue. We have a few very highly paid performers in the music business, but a lot of people who perform in the music business are the musicians, the side men and side women, so-called, who perform on the records who are not highly compensated. We have people who write songs who do not always get the big hits. We have arrangers and other people who perform creatively.

Record rental without this legislation threatens ultimately their source of income because their income comes from the pool that is available to those who hold the copyrights. But I want to add a caveat here very explicitly to those who do hold the copyrights, and that is to say that we are experimenting.

This is new legislation. This is, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER] pointed out, a change; an adaptation of copyright law. I think it is a very appropriate one because it is an effort to keep up with new technology. But I, and I think many others are going to want to see that the creative people get a share in the revenues generated here.

If we have a situation where the fees generated here out of rentals in no way reach some of the creative people and they do not always have the copyright—in some cases, the songwriter does not hold the copyright, and in other cases, the musicians, the performers, they never have it. It is going to be important to us to see that they participate in the fruits of this legislation.

Mr. KINDNESS. I yield myself such time as I may consume. Mr. Speaker, I am really encouraged and perhaps enlightened by some of the discussion that has occurred here and I am just delighted to see it come forward because I believe we are seeing in this discussion, this debate, more understanding of what is going on internationally with respect to proprietary interests than we saw last week when the drug patent extension bill was on the floor.

At that time, what we did was we voted as a House to cut back on the protection of intellectual property in order to give the rights to others to copy that intellectual property at an earlier time.

Today we are acting to protect it.

Last week we were acting to cut it back and at international commerce, we were hurting ourselves for a long time to come.

Remember a couple of years ago the infant formula dispute. That controversy that raged did not really have to do very much with the lives of infants. It had much more to do with an economic struggle, a concern over the control of the means of production. That is what that was really about.

When the World Health Organization formulated a code having to do with infant formula and encouraging breast feeding and discouraging or outlawing, in effect, communications about or advertising about infant formula, it was really an attempt to assure that as these things developed in the developing countries they would be manufactured there, not manufactured in the United States or other developed countries and sold into those lesser developed countries.

The same thing is now happening with prescription drugs and over-the-counter drugs.

Now, what does all this have to do with the bill before us? What it has to do with the bill before us is that we are acting entirely in the reverse direction today if we pass this bill as I think we should, as compared to what we did in cutting back on the patent protections for those who produce or develop pharmaceuticals in the bill that we considered last week.

Maybe we ought to be a little more consistent, but at any rate I am glad to see the intelligent light that has dawned upon us in a consideration of the bill before us today which I sincerely hope the House will pass unanimously.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KINDNESS] has broadened the parameters of this debate somewhat, but nonetheless, I will not yield to the temptation to enter into that particular area.

I would like to yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] 3 minutes. He is a member of the subcommittee who contributed to the work developing this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MITCHELL). The gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, it pleases me that the Record Rental Amendment of 1984 has finally reached the House floor. What we are doing here is tackling a problem before the damage to the creative community is too great, and before the practice of renting records and taping them at home grows so widespread that legislative solutions become more difficult to enact.

The problem we seek to address is clear: People who rent albums do so in order to make unauthorized copies at home. For the store that rents out the record, there is an obvious financial gain. For the person who makes an inexpensive tape of the rented LP, there is an obvious savings. But for the musicians, vocalists, composers, publishers, and record manufacturers who's talent and hard work went into making that record, there is no gain, no compensation—only lost royalties.

While there are legitimate reasons for a video cassette rental market to exist, and I might point out parenthetically that the proponents of amending the first sale doctrine with respect to video cassettes accept that principle, I don't see any justification for allowing this home taping of rented records to continue. Records are meant to be enjoyed over and over again, unlike video cassettes which are generally rented so that they may be viewed once. Many consumers would not care to make the investment needed to purchase a video cassette if they only intended to watch it once. Record consumers, however, should not be encouraged to rent albums they would otherwise buy, simply to facilitate the unauthorized taping and dissemination of these recordings. Renting, and then taping, an album is merely a convenient way for the consumer to avoid paying for what he or she is getting.

Royalties, amounting to only a few pennies per album, derive only from sales. As the option of renting and duplicating records at very small cost becomes more widely available, royalties decline. The loss to the record industry that results from the displacement of sales amounts to $1 billion a year. I worry that this will lead to decisions by record companies not to invest in new talent or less commercially popular artists because they can't afford to take the risk. This hurts artists, consumers, and America's musical tradition.

There is another aspect of record rentals which troubles me, and that is the erosion of the principle that a copyright holder is entitled to compensation for the commercial use of his or her creative property. The financial reward is part of the incentive for artists to contribute their talents to the public domain. In the case of rental stores, their success in no way benefits copyright holders, whose works, after all, form the basis of the rental business. This commercial exploitation of another person's creative property without the proper authorization is unfair and should be stopped.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] has expired.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. May I inquire of the Chair how much time I have remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN].

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me an additional minute.

The bill before us, H.R. 5938, simply amends the "first sale doctrine" in the Copyright Act so that this harmful practice does not gain further momentum. It would require authorization by the copyright owners before a record can be rented out. Private borrowing and the noncommercial lending of public libraries and schools would not be affected. It would still be permissible for stores to rent out their existing inventory without permission of the copyright holders. And there is nothing in this bill that would allow record companies or retailers to engage in activities that are otherwise prohibited by the antitrust laws.

H.R. 5938 represents a fair and reasonable solution to the problem of record rentals and should be passed without further delay. I urge my colleagues to vote "aye."

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON], a member of the subcommittee, who contributed to this bill and helped put it in the form it is in.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to rise in support of H.R. 5938, the Record Rental Amendments of 1984, which I think is a well-crafted bill, the result of careful study and hearings in our subcommittee, and I am pleased and proud to have been a part of bringing it to the floor.

This proposal came before the subcommittee with a laudable purpose; to insure the copyrighted records cannot be commercially rented and presumably copied without the authorization of and compensation to those who created the copyrighted works.

The practice of commercial rental is not currently widespread. However, technological developments in the form of superior copying equipment and the new compact disc present the prospect that without this legislation, creators in the very near future might be deprived of fair compensation and thus the incentive to create.

I am pleased to report that the subcommittee took this excellent proposal and improved upon it. We specifically exempted public schools and libraries; made it clear that antitrust laws continue to apply; eliminated criminal penalties for infringement; made the bill prospective only excepting existing inventories; and ensured that both the creator of the song and the record share in any royalties. We also provided a 5-year sunset to enable Congress to take account of the actual practices under the law.

Article I, section 8 of the Constitution provides that:

The Congress shall have Power * * * to Promote the Progress of Science and Useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries.

The monopoly privileges that Congress may confer " * * * are neither unlimited or primarily designed to provide a special private benefit. Rather, the limited grant is a means by which an important public purpose may be achieved." Sony Corp. v. Universal City Studios, Inc., 104 S. Ct. 774 (1984).

The congressional role, then, is to define the scope of the monopoly granted to the creator in order to serve as an incentive to the creation of new works for the benefit of the public. Clearly, this necessitates a balancing of interests.

I believe that what we have is an improvement in the copyright law, a proper balancing of the interest of the consumer and the interest of the creator.

That is the central purpose of copyright law. I think it has been realized here.

I would like to commend the chairman for his leadership in forging the necessary changes in this bill that allow it to come to the House floor as a noncontroversial matter and I hope it will be speeded on to passage and sent to the President.

● Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5938.

The problem which the record industry faces is more than a clash between titan commercial interest—the larger and more difficult problem is the adaptation of our copyright law, to new technologies. This is not a recent problem. We attempted, with the copyright revision in 1976, to try and adapt the law to various technologies. But the problem and the task of adaptation continues. It grows more serious every day because technology vastly expands the opportunities for copyrighted works to be replicated and used without the owner's control, without the owner's consent, and oftentimes without even the owner's knowledge. And the pace of technological innovation is itself accelerating.

Nowhere is this more apparent than in attempting to adapt the present day use of phonorecords to the traditional concept of the first-sale doctrine. To take a record album that retails at $10.95 and rent it for a day at $2 knowing full well that the album will be recorded and returned—knowing full well that the rental will clearly displace a sale. The idea of copyright is to reward the creator and as a result the public has access to his creation—the problem today is the public has the access like it's never had access before but the creator is not receiving his just reward. That is the adjustment Congress must make in order to preserve the traditional meaning of copyright, which has served this country so very well over the last five decades.

Copyright owners are, because of their creative and entrepreneurial talents, a unique group. They are a minority that cannot readily mobilize grassroots support on legislative issues, particularly copyright ones. This is especially true when the public is offered the choice of using your work product for practically free—but because their contributions to this country's spirit, culture, and economy are so important, the protection of their interest, although at times unpopular, must be on the conscience of the Congress not only as a matter of policy, but as a matter of fairness.

I urge your support for H.R. 5938. ● Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5938, relating to the rental of sound recordings. I have been a cosponsor of this legislation for the past two Congresses.

America is the leader in the development of high-technology products—computers and computer software, communications systems, information services, sophisticated chemicals, and the like. We are world leaders, as well, in motion pictures, books, music, records, and cassettes. Similarly, our marketing creativity and ingenuity will continue to be an engine of trade growth. While these products and services hold America's greatest promise for the future, they are also our most fragile commodity—fragile because, while difficult and expensive to create and market, they are easy and inexpensive to copy. The future of U.S. trade in products and services, based on intellectual properties, is critically dependent on a worldwide system of laws that provide adequate and effective protection against theft and unauthorized exploitation by others. In most of the world's developed countries, patent, copyright, trademark, and similar laws exist to protect these important properties. Many of the newly industrialized countries and less developed countries do not have effective intellectual property laws. China, for example, does not have a copyright law, but they have a new patent law which goes into effect in April 1985.

Without improvements in these systems of laws and provision for their effective enforcement, piracy and counterfeiting will become a way of life and will become such a critical portion of the gross national product of those countries that they will be extremely difficult if not impossible to stop. This problem is upon us now. We must create new systems of protection and enforcement. The old wornout systems of the 1960's and 1970's will not serve your industry in the 1980's.

The problems which creators and inventors face today is more than a clash between titan commercial interest, such as Betamax versus motion pictures or performing rights societies versus radio, TV, and jukebox. The larger and more difficult problem is the adaptation of old concepts of copyright law, to new and rapidly changing technologies. The problem today is that the public has access like it's never had access before but the creator is not receiving his just compensation. New technologies have brought the concert into the living room but not the box office, and if our music industry is to remain No. 1 in the world there must be a box office.

Nowhere is this more apparent than in attempting to adapt the present day use of phonorecords to the old copyright concept of the first-sale doctrine. The first-sale doctrine was never intended to be used as means to create a secondhand rental market that, left alone, would eventually replace a primary sales market.

H.R. 5938 would enable copyright owners to control the commercial lending of sound recordings even though ownership of the particular copy has been transferred. A similar measure has already passed the Senate and we expect this to become law this year. I urge your support for this legislation. ●

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I ask whether the gentleman from Wisconsin has further requests.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. No; I do not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KINDNESS. If not, Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5938.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 5938, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 32) to amend title 17 of the United States Code with respect to rental, lease, or lending of sound recordings, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 32

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Record Rental Amendment of 1983".

SEC. 2. Section 109(a) of chapter 1 of title 17 of the United States Code is amended by replacing the period at the end thereof with a colon and inserting thereafter the following: "Provided, however, That, unless authorized by the owners of copyright in the sound recording and in the musical works embodied therein, the owner of a particular phonorecord may not, for purposes of direct or indirect commercial advantage, dispose or authorize disposal of the possession of that phonorecord by rental, lease, or lending, or by any other activity or practice in the nature of rental, lease, or lending."

SEC. 3. Section 115(c) of chapter 1 of title 17 of the United States Code is amended by renumbering paragraphs (3) and (4) thereof as paragraphs (4) and (5), respectively, and by adding after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) A compulsory license under this section includes the right to distribute phonorecords by rental, lease, or lending (or by acts or practices in such nature). Without prejudice to the royalty payable under paragraph (2) of this subsection and chapter 8 of this title, a royalty shall be payable by the compulsory licensee for every act of distribution of a phonorecord by or in the nature of rental, lease, or lending, by or under the authority of the compulsory licensee. With respect to each work embodied in the phonorecord, the royalty shall be a proportion of the revenue received by the compulsory licensee from every such act of distribution of the phonorecord under this paragraph equal to the proportion of the revenue received by the compulsory licensee from distribution of the phonorecord under paragraph (2) that is payable by a compulsory licensee under such paragraph and under chapter 8. The register of Copyrights shall prescribe regulations to carry out the purpose of this paragraph."

SEC. 4. This amendment becomes effective upon its enactment.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. KASTENMEIER

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KASTENMEIER moves to strike all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, S. 32 and to insert in lieu thereof the provisions of H.R. 5938 as passed by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 5938) was laid on the table.

EQUAL ACCESS TO JUSTICE ACT
AMENDMENTS

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5479) to amend section 504 of title 5, United States Code, and section 2412 of title 28, United States Code, with respect to awards of expenses of certain agency and court proceedings, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5479

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 504(a)(1) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "as a party to the proceeding"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"The decision of the adjudicative officer on the application for fees and other expenses shall be the final administrative decision under this section."

(b) Section 504(a)(2) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "When the United States appeals the underlying merits of an adversary adjudication, no decision on an application for fees and other expenses in connection with that adversary adjudication shall be made under this section until a final and unreviewable decision is rendered by the court on the appeal."

(c) Section 504(b) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by amending paragraph (1)(B) to read as follows:

"(B) 'party' means a party, as defined in section 551(3) of this title, who is (i) an individual whose net worth did not exceed $1,000,000 at the time the adversary adjudication was initiated, or (ii) any owner of an unincorporated business, or any partnership, corporation, association, unit of local government, or organization, the net worth of which did not exceed $5,000,000 at the time the adversary adjudication was initiated, and which had not more than five hundred employees at the time the adversary adjudication was initiated; except that (I) an organization described in section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 501(c)(3)) exempt from taxation under section 501(a) of such Code and a cooperative association as defined in section 15(a) of the Agricultural Marketing Act (12 U.S.C. 1141(a)) may be a party regardless of the net worth of such organization or cooperative association, and (II) the adjudicative officer involved may adjust the net worth standards of $1,000,000 and $5,000,000 contained in this subparagraph, when appropriate, to reflect increases in the cost of living;"

(2) in paragraph (1)(C)—

(A) by inserting "(i)" before "an adjudication under";

(B) by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: "; and (ii) any appeal of a decision made pursuant to section 6 of the Contract Disputes Act of 1978 (41 U.S.C. 605) before an agency board of contract appeals as provided in section 8 of that Act (41 U.S.C. 607)"; and

(C) by striking out "and" at the end thereof;

(3) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (D) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(E) 'position of the agency' includes, but is not limited to, the actions and omissions of an agency which led to the adversary adjudication."

(d) Section 504(c)(2) of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(2) A party dissatisfied with a determination of fees and other expenses made under subsection (a) may, within thirty days after the determination is made, appeal the determination to the court of the United States having jurisdiction to review the merits of the underlying decision of the agency adversary adjudication. If the United States is dissatisfied with a determination of fees and other expenses made under subsection (a), it may, within thirty days after the determination is made, appeal the determination to the court of the United States having jurisdiction to review the merits of the underlying decision of the agency adversary adjudication. The court's determination on all appeals heard under this paragraph shall be based solely on the factual record made before the agency."

(e) Section 504(d)(2) of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(2) There are authorized to be appropriated to each agency for any fiscal year beginning on or after October 1, 1984, such sums as may be necessary to pay fees and other expenses awarded under this section."

(f) Section 504 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(f) If complete payment of the fees and other expenses awarded under this section is not made within sixty days after the final agency action making an award of such fees and other expenses, interest shall be paid on the amount remaining due. Such interest shall be computed at the rate the Secretary of the Treasury establishes for interest payments under section 12 of the Contract Disputes Act of 1978 (41 U.S.C. 611), and shall run from the date which is sixty-one days after the date of such award up to and including the date such payment is posted by certified or registered mail."

SEC. 2. (a) Section 2412 of title 28, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsections (a) and (b) by striking out "or any agency and any official of the United States" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "or any agency or official of the United States";

(2) in subsection (d)(1)(A) by inserting "including proceedings for judicial review of agency action," after "in tort"; and

(3) in subsection (d)(1)(B), by inserting immediately after "action" the following:

"or order of remand for further hearing made pursuant to section 205(g) or 1631(c)(3) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 405(g) or 1383(c)(3))."

(b) Section 2412(d)(2) of title 28, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (B) by striking out "(ii)" and all that follows through the end of the subparagraph and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "or (ii) any owner of an unincorporated business, or any partnership, corporation, association, unit of local government, or organization, the net worth of which did not exceed $5,000,000 at the time the civil action was filed, and which had not more than five hundred employees at the time the civil action was filed; except that (I) an organization described in section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 501(c)(3)) exempt from taxation under section 501(a) of such Code and a cooperative association as defined in section 15(a) of the Agricultural Marketing Act (12 U.S.C. 1141j(a)) may be a party regardless of the net worth of such organization or cooperative association, and (II) the court may adjust the net worth standards of $1,000,000 and $5,000,000 contained in this subparagraph when appropriate, to reflect increases in the cost of living;"

(2) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (C) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(D) 'position of the United States' includes, but is not limited to, the actions and omissions of an agency which led to the litigation;

"(E) 'civil action brought by or against the United States' includes an appeal by a party, other than the United States, from a decision of a contracting officer rendered pursuant to a disputes clause in a contract with the Government or pursuant to the Contract Disputes Act of 1978;

"(F) 'court' includes the United States Claims Court;

"(G) 'final judgment' means a judgment the time to appeal which has expired for all parties;

"(H) 'prevailing party in a civil action' includes a party who, pursuant to section 205(g) or 1631(c)(3) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 405(g) or 1383(c)(3)), has won an order remanding the cause for further hearing; and

"(I) 'prevailing party', in the case of eminent domain proceedings, means a party who obtains a final judgment (other than by settlement), exclusive of interest, the amount of which is at least as close to the highest valuation of the property involved that is attested to at trial on behalf of the property owner as it is to the highest valuation of the property involved that is attested to at trial on behalf of the Government."

(c) Section 2412(d)(4)(B) of title 28, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(B) There are authorized to be appropriated to each agency for any fiscal year beginning on or after October 1, 1984, such sums as may be necessary to pay fees and other expenses awarded under this subsection."

(d) Section 2412 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(f) If complete payment of the costs or fees and other expenses awarded under this section is not made within sixty days after the award of such costs or fees and other expenses, interest shall be paid thereafter on the amount remaining due. Such interest shall be computed at the rate the Secretary of the Treasury establishes for interest payments under section 12 of the Contract Disputes Act of 1978 (41 U.S.C. 611), and shall run from the date which is sixty-one days after the date of such award up to and including the date such payment is posted by certified or registered mail."

Sec. 3. Section 206 of the Equal Access to Justice Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "Nothing" and inserting in lieu thereof "(a) Except as provided in subsection (b), nothing"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(b) Section 206(b)(1) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 406(b)(1)) shall not prevent an award of fees and other expenses under section 2412(d) of title 28, United States Code, and section 206(b)(2) of that Act shall not apply with respect to any such award."

Sec. 4. The amendments made by the first section and sections 2 and 3 of this Act shall take effect on October 1, 1984, and shall apply to any adversary adjudication, as defined in clauses (i) and (ii) of section 504(b)(1)(C) of title 5, United States Code (as amended by the first section of this Act), and any civil action described in section 2412 of title 28, United States Code (as amended by section 2 of this Act), which is ending on or commenced after October 1, 1984.

Sec. 5. Section 203(c) of the Equal Access to Justice Act (Public Law 96-481) is repealed.

Sec. 6. Section 204(c) of the Equal Access to Justice Act is repealed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KINDNESS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5479, a bill to extend and improve the implementation of the Equal Access to Justice Act—title II, Public Law 96-481. Portions of the 1980 act expire on October 1, 1984, and urgently need to be extended H.R. 5479 makes the law permanent.

The bill which is before this body is a bipartisan product of the Committee on the Judiciary and was reported by voice vote with no opposition. I would like to commend the members of the subcommittee and the full committee—and in particular the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD], gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. KINDNESS] and Mr. SEIBERLING], and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON] for their assistance in drafting and processing this legislation. I recommend to the Members, the report (H. Rept. 98-992) which the committee has filed on H.R. 5479.

The legislative has widespread support from several organizations including the Small Business Administration's Office of Advocacy, Small Business United, the Small Business Legal Defense Committee, the Small Business Legislative Council, the National Federation of Independent Business, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the National Small Business Association, the Independent Business Association of Wisconsin, the Menswear Retailers of America, the Alliance for Justice, and the American Bar Association.

The administration supports the extension of the act, but opposes some of the provisions. I am sure that the administration will agree that H.R. 5479, as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, has responded to most of the concerns which were raised by the Department of Justice when its representative testified on March 14. H.R. 5479, clarifies and improves many provisions of concern to the Department including: First, the definition of eligible party, Second, the appeal rights and standard of review under the act; and Third, the effect of the act on condemnation proceedings.

The primary purpose of H.R. 5479 is to extend and make permanent those provisions of the Equal Access to Justice Act which will expire on October 1, 1984. These provisions were originally enacted as a 3-year experiment and, I might add, incidentally, not only did the Committee on the Judiciary participate in that regulation (S. 265/H.R. 5612), but certainly so did the Committee on Small Business, of which the present occupant of the chair, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MITCHELL] was a principal member. The act provided that the United States shall be liable for attorneys' fees and related expenses to eligible parties who prevail in adversary adjudications and civil actions, unless the United States can show that its position—including its underlying conduct which led to the administrative or court proceeding—was substantially justified or if special circumstances would make an award unjust. The act was aimed at reducing the disparity in resources between the Federal Government and parties in certain administrative and civil court proceedings. Eligible parties under the act are generally small businesses, individuals, units of local government, and other similar organizations. No individual can have a net worth exceeding $1 million. Organizations and businesses—except for agricultural cooperatives and organizations under 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code—cannot have a net worth exceeding $5 million. All organizations are limited to those with not more than 500 employees.

Rates of compensation for attorneys' fees are generally limited to $75 per hour unless the agency or court determines that an increase in the cost of living or a special factor, such as the limited availability of attorneys, applies. The act has not been very costly, amounting to only approximately $2½ million in awards since its effective date of October 1, 1981. The Congressional Budget Office [CBO] had originally projected a much higher figure—$100 million.

This year CBO has adjusted its cost estimate¹ downward estimating that the cost of the act, as amended by H.R. 5479, would be approximately $3.7 million for fiscal year 1985 and up to $7 million for fiscal year 1989. If half the parties who prevailed against the United States recovered fees, the figure could go as high as $30 million. However, it is unlikely that the amount would be that high, since there will be no award if the United States can show its conduct was substantially justified.

The major issue which H.R. 5479 clarifies is that the position of the agency or United States which must be substantially justified to relieve the United States of liability when the opposing party prevails is more than the Government's litigation position, and includes the underlying actions and omissions which lead to the proceeding. Although the administration does not like this particular interpretation, this expansive reading of the term is necessary to ensure the basic purpose of the act. Otherwise the Government could act in an unjustified manner until it filed suit or walked into the courtroom, and then escape liability. H.R. 5479 is merely asking that the Federal Government be accountable for its conduct.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge your support for this important bill, which will ensure that litigants involved in civil disputes with the Federal Government can vindicate their rights.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5479, which would permanently authorize the Equal Access to Justice Act and make needed and significant improvements in its provisions.

When the Equal Access to Justice Act was enacted in 1980, it was based on the recognition that, more often than not, individuals and small businesses with limited assets do not have the resources to defend against unjustified Government action. Especially where the cost of vindication routinely exceeds the amount at stake. Moreover, the Government does not have the economic incentive or disincentive to carefully evaluate the merits of its case before proceeding.

The act rectifies this situation by providing that individuals and small businesses are to be reimbursed for their attorneys' fees if they are successful in certain administrative and judicial actions with the U.S. Government, unless the Government can show that its position was substantially justified or that special circumstances would make such an award unjust.

To date, the number of awards made under the act, especially in administrative proceedings, have been minimal. It has been argued that this is due in large part to the fact that agencies have been reluctant to award attorneys' fees against themselves. As a result of this concern, H.R. 5479 makes it clear that the decisions of adjudicative officers on fee applications in agency proceedings are unreviewable by the agencies. During the full Judiciary Committee's consideration of H.R. 5479, I attempted to strike that provision based on the rationale that creating an unreviewable class of adjudicative officers' decisions is a significant departure from customary agency procedure in that it would be the only issue on which the adjudicative officer makes the final determination. Moreover, in the act's first 2 years, only three adjudicative officers' decisions have been reversed on agency review. However, it was the wisdom of the committee, by a margin of one vote, to give the adjudicative officer the authority to make the final fee determination, rather than the agency itself.

In light of the committee's decision on this issue, I offered a related amendment to ensure that the United States has the same right of appeal of an adverse agency decision on the issue of attorneys' fees and expenses as would a private party. I felt, and the committee apparently agreed in adopting my amendment, that it was inequitable to give a private party the right to appeal while requiring the Government to petition for the leave to appeal.

One of the important improvements in H.R. 5479 is the addition of a new provision which expressly placed Board of Contract Appeals proceedings under the Equal Access to Justice Act. As an author of the Contract Disputes Act of 1978, I have often been frustrated by agency and judicial misinterpretations which run contrary to the spirit of the act. Unfortunately, Equal Access to Justice and its application to the Contract Disputes Act has been yet another example of this type of misinterpretation.

After enactment of the Equal Access Law in 1980, it soon became apparent that Congress inadvertently left the door open to agency and judicial misinterpretation by not specifically authorizing the award of attorneys' fees against the United States in Board of Contract Appeals (BCA) proceedings. It was argued by those trying to limit that liability of the United States that Equal Access had no application to BCA proceedings because Congress had not explicitly authorized the award of attorneys' fees under BCA proceedings. Today, we are overruling this misinterpretation and clearly reestablishing the original intent of Congress to provide Equal Access to Justice in concert with the balanced alternative remedies found in the Contract Disputes Act of 1978. To leave this uncorrected would only undermine the carefully crafted balance set forth for Government contract dispute resolution and further burden the Claims Court with disputes otherwise and perhaps better settled on the BCA level.

In short, Mr. Speaker, the reauthorization of the Equal Access to Justice Act will serve to cement and improve upon the rights of citizens who feel that Government has treated them in an unjustified manner. Accordingly, I urge favorable consideration and passage.

As the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] have indicated, the committee adopted several other amendments to the Equal Access to Justice Act in an effort to improve its effectiveness. In light of the importance and complexity, of this legislation I believe that it will be incumbent upon the Judiciary Committee to exercise careful oversight in this area. Having said that, I urge my colleagues to support this significant legislation.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER], a member of the subcommittee.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5479, the reauthorization of the Equal Access to Justice Act. I supported the bill in subcommittee and full Judiciary Committee because it is an important step toward giving individuals, small businesses, and other organizations access to justice in administrative proceedings and civil actions.

H.R. 5479 not only extends, improves, and strengthens the Equal Access to Justice Act—it makes it permanent. The act expands the liability of the United States for attorneys' fees and other expenses to certain parties who prevail against the United States in certain administrative and court proceedings. Therefore, under the bill, prevailing parties in suits against the Government may recover attorneys' fees and certain other expenses when the Government is unable to show that its actions were substantially justified.

In my district of Denver, the small business community considers this bill to be the "magna carta for small business." There is a significant number of Federal functions in Denver and Colorado. Consequently, the small business community in Denver is engaged with the Federal Government in many contracts. This bill has had an important impact on small business in my district, and in the country, because it has caused Federal agencies to think twice before it initiates frivolous action. Federal agencies must consider the consequences of this bill.

As a member of the subcommittee, I want to commend Chairman KASTENMEIER and the small business community for their cooperative effort in producing a good, strong piece of legislation.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] who, representing the Committee on Small Business, had taken the original lead on this legislation 3 years ago and contributed so much to the form which the legislation eventually took. I want to compliment the gentleman from Iowa for his efforts.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I commend the committee not only for making this access to justice law permanent but also for substantially improving the legislation.

I want to point out a couple of things. For one thing, it was never intended by those of us who were the original authors of this bill in 1980 that the reimbursement would be limited to those cases where a U.S. attorney confirms the agency action. That was never intended, but that is the way it was ruled in at least one of the circuits, and that has been cured in this bill.

I do want to point out a couple of things, though, that I hope in conference the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Ohio will favorably consider. In the Senate bill, they include the IRS. Now, I know the Judiciary Committee had jurisdictional problems here, but in the Senate bill, they include the IRS as an agency which must reimburse people in certain cases, and in our hearings, we found that there were substantial numbers of cases where there are arbitrary actions taken by the Internal Revenue Service. I hope that when you come back with the final bill, the IRS will be included.

Another thing that I want to point out is that in the Senate bill, an agency required to pay the expenses to defend against an action which should not have been taken, shall be required to take out of their salaries and expenses account whatever it is determined should be reimbursed. By doing this, it keeps the pressure on the agency not to be arbitrary or take actions not substantially justified. That is in the Senate bill and if this is done, I think there will be a zero cost. The administration estimated the cost at $100 million. Well, at that time, they were asking for separate appropriations. The last thing we want to do is to give an agency a separate appropriation so that they can pay for whatever they did wrong. If we make them take such a cost out of their salaries and expenses account, then they will not have so many of these arbitrary decisions. So I want to commend the gentleman for this bill and also for the other bills. There are a whole series of bills here on the floor today, all of which have been revealed as needed in hearings before the subcommittee that I am privileged to chair.

One of the bills handled by the gentleman for New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER] involved priorities on the courts' time. In 1982, one prisoner had 35 habeas corpus petitions and when that happens, it takes the time of the courts away from something that is more important and it squeezes out something that is more important as far as law enforcement is concerned.

Also, the drug enforcement bill is a very important bill, so I want to commend both the full committee and the chairmen of the two subcommittees that have these bills on the floor today.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I just want to say, without belaboring this discussion, that this when we first adopted it in 1980 I thought was one of the most necessary and really justice-sounding type of bill. I know that almost all Federal agencies and Federal prosecutors try strictly to bring only those actions or take those positions that are in their view justified, substantially justified; but on occasion it happens that they do not and when it does happen, some small business, some individual, somebody that can ill afford to bear the expenses involved may be subjected to almost a devastating loss beyond either his individual means or the means of his individual business to sustain, even though they end up prevailing in the action.

Now, I would say that in those cases where the Government did not prevail in the action, but the other party did, it should raise I think somewhat of at least a presumption that the action was not substantially justified, leaving it subject to being corrected by proof that through some happenstance or some other reason the Government was substantially justified at the time, but failed to prevail.

I would hope that with these new amendments that we are adding in this bill, trying more and more to point up that question and to say that reasonably justified is not good enough. We turned that down before in the subcommittee and that by substantially justified we intend to mean more than reasonably justified.

I would hope they would look askance at the Government contending for that position and that exemption, where the Government had decisively and rather clearly lost the case, not to say that it cannot be that case, but it seems to me that the courts, as indicated by the figure of the awards given, have been somewhat loathe to exercise the right given them by this bill, and hopefully this bill amends that and will improve that situation.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5479, the Equal Access to Justice Act amendments. I am proud to have helped develop this bill in the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties, and Administration of Justice. I would like to commend our chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin, for his able leadership in moving this bill forward.

This bill confronts one of the most fundamental problems in our legal system: The gross inequality between the resources of the Federal Government and those who protest its actions; and as the title of the bill suggests, the aim of this legislation is to help remedy this inequality.

H.R. 5479 makes the Equal Access to Justice Act permanent. Under EAJA, the Federal Government is liable for attorneys' fees in some actions when an eligible party prevails against the Federal Government. The Federal Government is liable unless the United States can show that its position, including its underlying conduct, was substantially justified, or unless special circumstances would make an award unjust.

One section of the bill, that pertaining to the Social Security Administration, warrants special attention. In this section, the bill sends a clear directive to the Social Security Administration to reconsider and correct their policies of the past 3 years.

Since passage of the original EAJA legislation in 1980, the overwhelming majority of cases in which the Government's legal position has been found to be "not substantially justified" have involved the Social Security Administration's wholesale cancellation of disability benefits. SSA itself has just completed a study documenting this problem.

As reported by the September 9, New York Times, SSA has stated that "its efforts to remove people from the disability rolls have produced a major crisis in litigation" and led to a "huge volume of adverse court decisions" and that "the agency's credibility before the Federal courts is at an all-time low" because many judges were convinced that Social Security will "defend any case in court, no matter how terrible the claimant's circumstances."

The confidential study said that there were now 48,000 Social Security cases pending in Federal courts around the country, up from 19,600 at the end of 1981. Last year, it said, 26,798 new cases were filed, an average of about 100 for each workday. Lawsuits have been filed at a slightly higher rate this year. The Government routinely filed answers to the lawsuits without making a "substantive assessment" of whether its positions were defensible, the Times reported.

H.R. 5479 responds in part to these disastrous policies. The bill makes permanent the coverage under EAJA for court proceedings involving SSA. While hearings at the administrative level are not normally covered, administrative hearings at which the Secretary of Health and Human Services is represented by counsel are made eligible under EAJA by this bill. These include the adversarial experiments, Government representation projects, or pilot projects that have been undertaken.

Another important improvement made by H.R. 5479 is clarification of the concept of "prevailing party" in Social Security and SSI cases. The realities are that when a court rules, for example, that the Secretary failed to apply the proper standards in determining disability, the court will remand the case to the Secretary for a new decision in line with the court's instructions. In cases involving SSA, this is normally how a plaintiff prevails and H.R. 5479 recognizes this in terms of EAJA eligibility.

Despite these improvements, the EAJA does not go far enough, in my opinion, in extending coverage in SSA cases. I offered an amendment in the full Judiciary Committee which would have made fees available in all ALJ hearings, not just those in which the Government is represented. Although the amendment initially passed by division, in a subsequent recorded vote decided by proxies, the amendment was defeated 10 to 11. Of course, consideration of this amendment at this time is precluded by the suspension procedure. However, the Senate version of this bill does include the substance of my amendment and I am hopeful that when this bill is considered in conference that coverage will be extended in the final legislation to Social Security proceedings at the administrative level.

I think it is important that when the actions of the Government are not substantially justified with respect to Social Security recipients, the attorneys' fees that it takes to get that action overturned ought not to come out of the recovery of the disabled person, which has been the case up to this point.

Mr. Speaker, if I might, I would like to ask the chairman if he agrees that this is something that could properly be considered in conference and hopefully resolved in the direction that the Senate has moved.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Connecticut yield?

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. I yield to the distinguished chairman.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. I might parenthetically say that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] raised a couple of issues as did the gentleman from Connecticut as to matters which may arise hypothetically in a conference.

Obviously, I think the gentleman from Connecticut knows that I sympathize with him in terms of the merits of the amendment he offered, but I felt that tactically and from a parliamentary standpoint, it was not wise or possible to include his amendment at this point.

Within the parameters of the parliamentary situation, and depending upon what the other body does and whether in fact we go to conference, indeed, those matters may come up. I would hope that if it were a matter of conference, that the gentleman from Connecticut would be a conferee to represent that point of view.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. I thank the chairman and look forward to working with him to accomplish a goal that I think we share.

I yield back the balance of my time. ● Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to concur in the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and indicate my strong support for the extension of the Equal Access to Justice Act. The act provides an important avenue of redress for small businesses and individuals with limited assets when they are forced to litigate against unreasonable Government regulation in order to vindicate their rights. Prior to enactment of the act in 1980, a small businessman subjected to questionable agency regulation would have to assess the costs of contesting the agency action against what was at stake. All too often the amount at stake was exceeded by the costs of contesting the agency action. Under this set of circumstances the small businessman was coerced into compliance even though he may have had a strong case and ultimately prevailed on the merits.

I think it is significant that there have been a relatively low number of applications for awards filed under the act during its first 2 years. While the low number of applications may in part be a result of the act's novelty, as well as certain ambiguities in its provisions, I think they also indicate that the act is helping to provide for a more accountable bureaucracy. Moreover, the experience under the act to date, has helped to highlight existing ambiguities and problems that have been encountered with implementation of the act. H.R. 5479 is designed to address these problems in a manner that will improve the act's effectiveness. The act has wide support from such organizations as the Small Business United, Small Business Legal Defense Committee, Small Business Legislative Council, the National Federation of Independent Business, the Chamber of Commerce, the National Small Business Association, the American Bar Association, and the Alliance for Justice. Accordingly I urge my colleagues to strongly support the passage of H.R. 5479. ●

● Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the enactment of this legislation which would reauthorize the Equal Access to Justice Act and make important improvements and clarifications in its provisions.

When Congress first approved the Equal Access to Justice Act in 1980 (Public Law 96-481), it was rightfully hailed as landmark legislation by the small business community. This law makes it clear that when individuals, small businesses, and other small organizations prevail against the United States in an administrative proceeding or in a court action, that they should be reimbursed for their attorney's fees and related legal expenses unless the position of the United States is determined to be "substantially justified" or that special circumstances make such an award unjust.

So, Congress intended to place small businesses, other small organizations, and individuals on a more equal footing with the Federal Government in both regulatory proceedings and court actions. Specifically, we wanted to give them an option, rather than simply having to "give in" in the face of costly litigation with the Federal Government. We also wanted Federal departments and agencies to give careful consideration to the real merits of their case before pursuing an administrative enforcement action or a court proceeding. If individuals or small businesses are victims of careless, unreasonable, or unfair governmental action, they should not be forced to merely capitulate or to bear the cost of their successful defense.

H.R. 5479 would permanently authorize the Equal Access to Justice Act. Originally, the statute provided for a 3-year trial period, from October 1, 1981 to September 30, 1984. Experience under the EAJA has proven to be, on balance, successful and its implementation has been far less expensive than its critics originally estimated. During the first 2 fiscal years of its operation fiscal year 1982 and fiscal year 1983, only 72 awards were made, totaling approximately $2.5 million. Sixty-four of these awards were in court proceedings and eight of these awards were in administrative proceedings. The amount of these awards is far less than the $100 million annual estimate by the Congressional Budget Office when the EAJA was enacted in 1981. It should be emphasized that the updated cost estimate done by the CBO for H.R. 5479 is considerably less than its initial estimate—$7 million per year.

H.R. 5479 also makes important clarifications and additions to the language of the statute. First, this legislation makes it clear that the "position of the agency" and "position of the United States" in the Equal Access to Justice Act means not only the formal position taken in litigation but also includes those actions or omissions by the agency that led to the adversary adjudication or court proceeding in the first place. Second, this measure extends EAJA coverage to proceedings before agency boards of contract appeals under the Contract Disputes Act of 1978 (41 U.S.C. §§ 601-613). Also, this measure gives the United States, for the first time, the right to appeal a fee determination by an administrative law judge. At the current time, only a nongovernmental party can appeal fee awards under this statute.

H.R. 5479 also includes the language of amendment which I offered in the full Judiciary Committee to expand the definition of eligible "party" under this statute. As originally enacted, the definition of party contained the words "corporation" and "organization". The issue as to whether or not units or local government were eligible to be reimbursed for attorney's fees and court costs was left ambiguous. The unfortunate result has been that, for the most part, smaller governmental bodies have not been considered to be eligible parties under the act.

In my estimation, the Equal Access to Justice Act should assist any small organization, whether private or governmental, that is involved in a regulatory or litigation dispute with the United States and where the position of the United States is determined to be not "substantially justified." Units of local government are frequently involved in adjudications or litigation regarding grant eligibility and grant reductions under a variety of Federal assistance programs. Smaller governmental entities face the same cost deterrents and other disadvantages that small businesses do in such proceedings. They should be eligible for reimbursement for their fees and expenses where appropriate. I was most gratified when my amendment was adopted by the full committee.

This extension of the Equal Access to Justice Act has received broad support from such groups as the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the National Federation of Independent Business, the American Bar Association, the National Small Business Association, the Administrative Conference of the United States, and the Office of Advocacy of the Small Business Administration.

In summary, this legislation permanently codifies a remedial statute that has proven that it can work well and, in addition, makes numerous clarifications in the language of the law to further assure fairness to both sides. I strongly urge my colleagues to support the passage of H.R. 5479. ●

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and if the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] has no further requests, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5479, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill, as amended was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SHOALWATER BAY INDIAN TRIBE — DEXTER - BY - THE - SEA CLAIM SETTLEMENT ACT

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5714) entitled the "Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe—Dexter-by-the-Sea Claim Settlement Act".

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5714

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe—Dexter-by-the-Sea Claim Settlement Act".

CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) there is pending before the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington at Tacoma a civil action numbered C83-167T entitled the "Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe, a federally recognized Indian tribe against Joe Amador and Jean Amador, et al.", which involves claims to certain privately held lands within the Shoalwater Bay Indian Reservation in Tokeland, Washington, known as Dexter-by-the-Sea and First Addition Dexter-by-the-Sea;

(2) the owners of such lands derive their title from a patent issued by the United States Government to George N. Brown on August 1, 1872, certificate numbered 3763;

(3) the Shoalwater Bay Indian Reservation was established by Executive order of President Andrew Johnson on September 22, 1866, and is alleged to include the lands claimed by the Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe in such civil action;

(4) in its patent to George N. Brown in 1872, the United States failed to exempt the lands claimed by the Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe in such civil action from the Shoalwater Bay Indian Reservation established in 1866;

(5) since 1872, such lands have been the subject of disputes claiming dual chains of title in the United States as trustee for the Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe and the patentee, George N. Brown and his successors in title, the defendants in such civil action;

(6) the pendency of such civil action has placed a cloud on the titles held by residents of Dexter-by-the-Sea and First Addition Dexter-by-the-Sea rendering their property essentially unmarketable; and

(7) a legislative resolution of such civil action is appropriate because the United States Government is responsible for the failure to except the land now known as Dexter-by-the-Sea and First Addition Dexter-by-the-Sea from the patent to George N. Brown in 1872.

SEC. 3. Upon receipt of the funds to be paid from the Treasury of the United States under section 4 of this Act:

(a) All rights, title, and interest of the Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe, in, and claims to, the lands which are located within the State of Washington in the westerly portion of Government lot 1 in section 11, township 14 north, range 11 west, W.N., that are the subject of the civil action referred to in section 2(1) of this Act and are known as Dexter-by-the-Sea Subdivision and First Addition to Dexter-by-the-Sea Subdivision, shall be extinguished.

(b) The lands described in subsection (a) shall not be considered to be within the exterior boundaries of the Shoalwater Bay Indian Reservation. Except to the extent provided in the preceding sentence, the exterior boundaries of such reservation shall not be affected by the provisions of this Act.

(c) The validity of the patent issued by the United States on August 1, 1872, to George N. Brown, certificate number 3763, shall be ratified.

SEC. 4. (a)(1) If the requirements of subsection (b) of this section are met, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed in fiscal year 1985 to pay, out of funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, $1,115,000 directly to the Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe.

(2) The funds described in paragraph (1) shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury in full settlement of all claims of the Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe, and of any other party to such civil action described in section 2(1), which arise by reason of the issuance of the patent described in section 3(c).

(b) The requirements of this subsection are met if—

(1) the governing body of the Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe adopts a resolution which—

(A) authorizes the execution by an officer or official of such tribe of documents as the Secretary of the Interior determines to be necessary to settle the claims described in subsection (a)(2),

(B) waives all rights and claims of such tribe against the United States, and against any other person, which arise by reason of the issuance of the patent described in section 3(c), and

(C) is approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and

(2) a final order is entered in the civil action described in section 2(1) which dismisses with prejudice all claims, crossclaims, counterclaims, third-party claims, and all other claims arising out of such civil action.

(c) None of the funds paid to the Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe under subsection (a)(1) shall be used to make any per capita distribution to members of such tribe.

Sec. 5. (a) The Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe is authorized to utilize the funds paid to the tribe under provisions of this Act for any purpose authorized by ordinance or resolution of the tribe, including investment for economic development purposes.

(b) The tribe shall maintain a segregated accounting system for all principal and income from such funds and shall cause an annual audit to be conducted by an independent certified public accountant. The results of such audit shall be made available for inspection by any enrolled member of the tribe and shall be made available to the Secretary of the Interior.

(c) Except as otherwise provided in this section, funds held and administered by the Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe which are the subject of this Act, and income derived therefrom, shall be treated in the same fashion as if held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That nothing in this Act shall be construed as requiring that the Secretary of the Interior give any prior approval to investment or expenditure of these funds.

(d) Upon payment of the funds to the Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe, the Secretary of the Interior shall have no trust responsibility for the investment, supervision, administration, or expenditure of such funds.

(e) None of the funds or income therefrom distributed under this Act shall be subject to Federal or State income taxes or be considered as income or resources in determining eligibility for or the amount of assistance under the Social Security Act or any other federally assisted program.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not recognized on this motion.

The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. PRITCHARD] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL].

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5714 is a bill by our colleague from Washington, Mr. BONKER, to provide for the settlement of the land claim of the Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe in western Washington. The tribe has filed suit in Federal district court against the owners of about 60 parcels of private property located in a subdivision known as Dexter-by-the Sea. It appears that these property owners derive their titles from a patent erroneously given by the United States to one George Brown in 1872. This patent was issued for lands which in 1866 had been reserved by Executive order to the Indian tribe.

H.R. 5714, introduced by Mr. BONKER, would remove the clouds on the titles of these innocent landowners who purchased these lands in good faith and would award $1.115 million to the tribe. In exchange, the tribe would relinquish its claims to these lands.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5714 has bipartisan support as an identical bill, sponsored by Senator GORTON, has already passed the Senate. The bill would rectify a mistake that was made some 113 years ago by the United States and in the process would prevent the ejection of some innocent homeowners. Therefore, I urge its passage by the House.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5714. This is an unusual situation in which clearly the law has been badly bent and the result is that there are a lot of homeowners who have a cloud over their homes.

While normally we would not go this way, I think it makes eminently good sense because it will be far more expensive for the Federal Government if we go ahead with these lawsuits. So I would urge support of my colleagues for this measure and yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the author of the bill, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BONKER].

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, this legislation, H.R. 5714, is designed to settle a longstanding land dispute involving the Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe and residents of the Dexter-by-the-Sea subdivision near Tokeland in southwest Washington. The bill will provide a monetary settlement to the tribe for land wrongfully transferred to innocent non-Indians.

In 1866, President Andrew Johnson established a reservation for the Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe by Executive order. This controversy has its roots in an action 6 years later, in 1872, when the United States, because of a technical error, permitted part of the reservation to be patented away. The area in question, part of what is presently known as the Dexter-by-the-Sea subdivision, was sold to individual non-Indian purchasers who had every reason to believe that they were getting clear legal title to the land.

The present Dexter-by-the-Sea landowners, some of whom are retired and depend on their homes as nest eggs, recently found that title to the land in question was clouded when the Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe brought suit to recover this portion of their reservation. These landowners are faced with a lawsuit for trespass and ejection and cannot sell their property until this matter is cleared up. This represents a severe hardship for these individuals, who reasonably believed they had good title to the land, brought about by a Government error in granting the original 1872 patent to the land.

Mr. Speaker, where the United States is responsible for this unfortunate state of affairs, it should also be responsible for its resolution. This legislation is the product of careful negotiation between all of the concerned parties. It represents a delicate balancing of the tribe's interest in the land in question, the need to clear the title of the Dexter-by-the-Sea property owners, and local, State, and Federal interests.

If we fail to approve this settlement, the result will be personal hardship and years of expensive and divisive litigation. The Federal Government would not be spared these consequences. Judge Tanner has already ruled that the Federal Government is not immune from liability in this case either under the sovereign immunity doctrine or a narrow construction of the Federal Tort Claims Act. The Government is a party defendant in this action. Liability and legal expenses could involve millions of Federal dollars. Even without figuring in damages, the cost of the property would be well over $1 million (the 1983 assessed value of the 92 lots in the Dexter-by-the-Sea development was over $2.5 million—it is estimated that 62 of the lots are within the reservation boundaries). To oppose this legislation on budgetary grounds would be a false economy. The costs to the Government of rejecting this settlement are far greater than accepting it.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5714).

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs be discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 1735) entitled the "Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe-Dexter by the Sea Claim Settlement Act," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 1735

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe-Dexter-by-the-Sea Claims Settlement Act".

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

INDIAN FINANCING ACT
AMENDMENTS OF 1984

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5519) to reauthorize and amend the Indian Financing Act, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5519

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Indian Financing Act Amendments of 1984".

SEC. 2. Section 101 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1461) is amended by striking out "which are not members of or eligible for membership in an organization which is making loans to its members".

SEC. 3. Section 105 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1465) is amended by striking out "United States: Provided, That proceedings pursuant to this sentence shall be effective only after following the procedure prescribed by the Act of July 1, 1932 (47 Stat. 564; 25 U.S.C. 386a)" and inserting in lieu thereof "United States".

SEC. 4. Section 201 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1481) is amended by striking out "who are not members of or eligible for membership in an organization which is making loans to its members".

SEC. 5. Section 204 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1484) is amended—

(1) by striking out "$100,000" in the fourth sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "$350,000".

(2) by inserting the following sentence after the first sentence: "The Secretary shall review each loan application individually and independently from the lender."

SEC. 6. Section 211 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1491) is amended by striking out "section: Provided, That proceedings pursuant to this sentence shall be effective only after following the procedure prescribed by the Act of July 1, 1932 (47 Stat. 564; 25 U.S.C. 386a)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section".

SEC. 7. Section 217 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1497) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year beginning in fiscal year 1985 such sums as may be necessary to fulfill obligations with respect to losses on loans guaranteed or insured under this title. All collections shall remain until expended."

SEC. 8. Section 302 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1512) is amended to read as follows:

"There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1985, and for each fiscal year thereafter, an amount which does not exceed $5,500,000 for purposes of making interest payments authorized under this title.

Sums appropriated under this section, shall remain available until expended."

Sec. 9. Section 402(a) of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1522) is amended to read as follows:

"No grant in excess of $100,000 in the case of an Indian and $250,000 in the case of an Indian tribe, or such lower amount as the Secretary may determine to be appropriate, may be made under this title."

Sec. 10. Section 403 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1523) is amended to read as follows:

"There are authorized to be appropriated not to exceed the sum of $10,000,000 per year for fiscal year 1986 and each fiscal year thereafter for the purposes of this title."

Sec. 11. The Secretary, in his discretion, may require security other than bonds required by the Miller Act (40 U.S.C. 270a) when entering into a contract with an Indian-owned economic enterprise pursuant to the provisions of the Act of June 25, 1910 (25 U.S.C. 47), for the construction, alteration, or repair of any public work of the United States: Provided, That, the alternative form of security provides the United States with adequate security for performance and payment.

Sec. 12. Section 501 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1541) is amended to read as follows:

"Prior to and concurrent with the making or guaranteeing of any loan under subchapters I and II of this chapter and with the making of a grant under subchapter IV of this chapter, the purpose of which is to fund the development of an economic enterprise, the Secretary shall insure that the loan or grant applicant shall be provided competent management and technical assistance for preparation of the application and/or administration of funds granted consistent with the nature of the enterprise proposed to be or in fact funded."

Sec. 13. Section 503 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1543) is amended to read as follows:

"For the purpose of entering into contracts pursuant to section 502 of this title in fiscal year 1985, the Secretary is authorized to use not to exceed 5 per centum of any funds appropriated for any fiscal year pursuant to section 302 of this Act. For fiscal year 1986 and for each fiscal year thereafter, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. McCAIN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL].

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5519 is a bill to reauthorize and amend the Indian Financing Act of 1974. This act created four programs. Title I authorized the United States to issue direct loans to Indian and Indian tribes from a revolving loan fund. Title II authorized the United States to provide Federal guarantees on loans made to Indians and Indian tribes. Title III allowed the United States to provide interest subsidies on these guaranteed loans, and title IV, created an Indian Business Grants Program. Since title I does not need to be reauthorized, the bill addresses itself to titles II, III, and IV.

The purpose of the Indian Financing Act is to provide credit that is not otherwise available to Indians and Indian tribes from private money markets. In providing capital on a reimbursable basis, it is hoped that Indians will be better able to utilize their own resources and achieve economic self-sufficiency and self-determination.

Mr. Speaker, Indian reservations are suffering from chronic unemployment and are among the poorest areas of this country. One of the biggest problems is the lack of capital necessary to begin economic development. This act has worked well in the past and although it is far from a comprehensive solution to the problems facing reservations today, its reauthorization would provide an opportunity to many Indian tribes and Indian individuals so that economic self-sufficiency and economic development have a fighting chance to be transposed from concepts to reality. Therefore, I urge the passage of H.R. 5519 by the House.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, I request to use as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5519, the Indian Financing Act Amendments of 1984.

The Indian Financing Act of 1974 was landmark legislation designed to provide for Federal, Indian, and private sector cooperation and funding to develop Indian reservation economies. The programs established by that act have directly contributed to the creation of hundreds of successful businesses and thousands of jobs on Indian reservations in desperate need of economic development.

Over the past 10 years, $41 million appropriated to the revolving loan fund established by the act has generated over $80 million in loan activity. The loan guaranty and interest subsidy program which would be extended by H.R. 5519 has been the key factor in bringing over $100 million in private capital to reservation-based business enterprise.

H.R. 5519 amends the 1974 act to adjust its provisions to changes in the national economy and to expand financing opportunities to individual Indians. It also provides for additional management and technical assistance.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, the technical assistance is much required on the reservations today, and on many of the reservations there is not the kind of technical expertise that must be utilized in order to take advantage of this legislation.

H.R. 5519 has the support of virtually all Indians, Indian tribes, and organizations. As amended, it includes most of the modifications to the original text that were recommended by the administration. H.R. 5519 is entirely consistent with the President's Indian policy, which emphasizes the need for reservation economic development through cooperative efforts by Indians, the Federal Government, and the private sector.

The other body has passed a companion bill by unanimous consent.

It is all too apparent that there is great need for continued Federal support for economic development efforts on Indian reservations.

□ 1520

H.R. 5519 provides that support. It is meritorious legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, many of our colleagues may have seen in the last few days articles in the Washington Post which dramatically and graphically described the economic conditions which exist on some of our reservations.

There are many actions that the Congress needs to take in order to fulfill its obligations to our Indian tribes.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is only one of many, but certainly an important one.

Mr. Speaker, I urge support of my colleagues for this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill H.R. 5519, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs be discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 2614) to amend the Indian Financing Act of 1974, a measure similar to the bill just passed, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 2614

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Indian Financing Act Amendments of 1984".

INDIAN REVOLVING LOAN FUND

Sec. 2. Section 101 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1461) is amended by striking out "who are not members of or eligible for membership in an organization which is making loans to its members."

Sec. 3. Section 105 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1465) is amended by striking out "United States: Provided, That proceedings pursuant to this sentence shall be effective only after following the procedure prescribed by the Act of July 1, 1932 (47 Stat. 564, 25 U.S.C. 386a)" and inserting in lieu thereof "United States".

LOAN GUARANTY AND INSURANCE

Sec. 4. (a) Section 201 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1481) is amended—

(1) by striking out "who are not members of or eligible for membership in an organization which is making loans to its members", and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The full faith and credit of the United States is pledged to the fulfillment of any obligation incurred by the Secretary with respect to loans guaranteed or insured under this title."

(b) Section 204 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1484) is amended—

(1) by striking out "$100,000" in the fourth sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "$250,000";

(2) by inserting the following sentence after the first sentence: "The Secretary shall review each loan application individually and independently from the lender,"

(3) by striking out "The application" in the first sentence of such section and inserting in lieu thereof "(a) The application", and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) Once a loan is approved by the Secretary, the Secretary and the lender shall maintain close supervision and management of the loan until the loan is liquidated. In order to enhance the success of Indian businesses and to facilitate control of losses, the Secretary shall adopt sound credit procedures in order to—

"(1) identify and predict problem situations before such situations occur, and

"(2) ensure that losses are minimized."

(d) Section 217 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1497) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year beginning in fiscal year 1985 such sums as may be necessary to fulfill obligations with respect to losses on loans guaranteed or insured under this title. All collections and appropriations shall remain until expended."

INTEREST SUBSIDIES

Sec. 5. (a) Section 301 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1511) is amended—

(1) by striking out "The Secretary" and inserting in lieu thereof "(a) The Secretary", and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) The full faith and credit of the United States is pledged to the fulfillment of any contractual obligation which the Secretary incurs for the payment of any interest subsidy authorized under this section."

(b) Section 302 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1512) is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 302. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1985, and for each fiscal year thereafter, such sums as may be necessary for purposes of making interest payments authorized under this title with respect to any loan made before the close of fiscal year 1984.

"(b) There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1985, and for each fiscal year thereafter, an amount which does not exceed $5,500,000 for purposes of making interest payments authorized under this title with respect to any loan made after the close of fiscal year 1984."

FUNDING OF CONTRACTS FOR MANAGEMENT AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

Sec. 6. Section 503 of the Indian Financing Act of 1974 (25 U.S.C. 1543) is amended by striking out "the Secretary is authorized to use not to exceed 5 per centum of any funds appropriated for any fiscal year pursuant to section 1512 of this title," and inserting in lieu thereof "there are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title."

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. UDALL

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. UDALL moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, S. 2614, and to insert in lieu thereof the provisions of H.R. 5519, as passed by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the Senate bill was amended so as to read: "An Act to reauthorize and amend the Indian Financing Act."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill, H.R. 5519, was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS TO THE HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT ACT

Mr. FRANK. I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill (S. 2819), to make essential technical corrections to the Housing and Urban Rural Recovery Act of 1983, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 2819

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Housing and Community Development Technical Amendments Act of 1984".

TITLE I—TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS TO HOUSING AND URBAN-RURAL RECOVERY ACT OF 1983

COMMUNITY AND NEIGHBORHOOD DEVELOPMENT AND CONSERVATION

Sec. 101. (a)(1) The last sentence of section 102(a)(4) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended—

(A) by striking out "while its population is included in an urban county for such fiscal year";

(B) by striking out "continues" and inserting in lieu thereof "elects"; and

(C) by striking out "such" the last place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "an".

(2) Section 102(a)(6) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended—

(A) in the penultimate sentence, by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "except that the provisions of this sentence shall not apply with respect to any county losing its classification as an urban county by reason of the election of any unit of general local government included in such county to have its population excluded under clause (B)(i) of the first sentence or to not renew a cooperation agreement under clause (B)(ii) of such sentence";

(B) by inserting before the semicolon at the end of clause (B) of the last sentence the following: "excluding the population of metropolitan cities therein) in all its unincorporated areas that are not units of general local government and in all units of general local government located within such county"; and

(C) by inserting before the period at the end of clause (B) of the last sentence the following: "excluding the population of metropolitan cities therein) in all its unincorporated areas that are not units of general local government and in all units of general local government located within such county".

(3) Section 102(a)(20) of the Housing and Community Development Technical Amendments Act of 1974 is amended to read as follows:

"(20)(A) The terms 'persons of low and moderate income' and 'low- and moderate-income persons' mean families and individuals whose incomes do not exceed 80 percent of the median income of the area involved, as determined by the Secretary with adjustments for smaller and larger families. The term 'persons of low income' means families and individuals whose incomes do not exceed 50 percent of the median income of the area involved, as determined by the Secretary with adjustments for smaller and larger families. The term 'persons of moderate income, means families and individuals whose incomes exceed 50 percent, but do not exceed 80 percent, of the median income of the area involved, as determined by the Secretary with adjustments for smaller and larger families. For purposes of such terms, the area involved shall be determined in the same manner as such area is determined for purposes of assistance under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937.

"(B) The Secretary may establish percentages of median income for any area that are higher or lower than the percentages set forth in subparagraph (A), if the Secretary finds such variations to be necessary because of unusually high or low family incomes in such area."

(4) Section 102(a)(21) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended by striking out "capital or office buildings" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "capitol or office buildings."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. McKINNEY] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK].

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I act here in the absence of the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ], who will be joining us during the consideration.

Mr. Speaker, this is a noncontroversial bill which makes some technical amendments to the Housing and Urban Rural Recovery Act which was passed by both Houses last year.

Title I of the amendment deals with the specific corrections and clarifications with regard to Public Law 98-181. Title I also makes technical corrections to the community development block grant and the assisted housing programs administered by the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Farmers Home Administration's rural housing programs.

With regard to the Community Development Block Grant Program, the amendment contains a provision to provide much-needed flexibility for entitlement communities in the principally benefit tests where low-moderate-income people are not densely concentrated. This provision is necessary to insure that the areawide activities can serve low- and moderate-income families in less densely impacted areas and would permit community development block grant activities to be considered to benefit low- and moderate-income families if they are clearly designed to meet the needs of such families and they are located within areas which are among the top 25 percent of all areas within the community having the highest concentration of low- and moderate-income people. This title would also clarify conditions under which an urban county that contained newly identified metropolitan cities can be considered an urban county entitlement jurisdiction if the metropolitan city defers its classification for purposes of the Community Development Block Grant Program. In addition, the cities of Baltimore and Denver may retain the proceeds and interest from certain urban renewal projects as long as those funds are used in accordance with the requirements of the CDBG Program.

With regard to assisted housing programs, this amendment corrects a technical omission with regard to the use of section 235 Homeownership

Subsidy Funds; would permit handicapped employed residents to deduct from their income attendant care costs; would permit the HUD Secretary to increase moderate rehabilitation section 8 assistance to assure that low-income residents can continue to live in rental apartments sold from the HUD inventory; would preserve the HUD Secretary's authority to provide section 8 existing contracts on a project basis in the Loan Management and Property Disposition Program, and would provide an additional 12 cities eligible for grants under the new Rental Housing Development Program.

Title II contains technical and conforming amendments to those provisions of our housing and community development laws not affected by actions taken in last year's Housing Act. Title II corrects archaic references to agencies and departments whose names have been changed, such as the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to the Department of Health and Human Services.

With regard to the Farmers Home Administration's rural housing program, the amendment would prohibit the transfer of rural housing loan authority to any other program beginning in fiscal year 1985; would resolve the section 502 homeownership targeting issue by adopting Senate language which provides separate set-asides in section 502 authority among very low income borrowers and low income borrowers; and would make clear that States and localities providing rental assistance payments for low income rural projects would not be required to meet any other feasibility requirement in order to obtain a section 515 rental housing loan than is already required by the Farmers Home Administration's Rental Assistance Payment Program.

A provision of the amendment requires the HUD Secretary to issue regulations, by October 31, 1984, to implement section 436 of the 1983 amendments, which was offered by my colleague, Congressman MIKE LOWRY of Washington. That section made FHA hospital mortgage insurance available for the first time to public hospitals. This was a noncontroversial amendment, with considerable bipartisan support, intended to provide needed assistance in obtaining access to capital for those hospitals which continue to maintain a commitment to keep their doors open for all of our Nation's citizens regardless of their ability to pay. Several public hospitals around the country have, in fact, been preparing to submit applications under this new authority.

For this reason, the Banking Committee has been extremely concerned about delays in the implementation of this provision caused by HUD's insistence that additional regulations are needed. The provision thus directs HUD to promulgate any such regulations by October 31, at the latest. Moreover, we strongly urge the Department to promulgate these regulations on an interim final basis, rather than as a notice of proposed rule-making. It is imperative that effective regulations be implemented quickly so that State certificates of need and current feasibility studies do not expire or become outdated.

In addition, HHS Secretary Heckler should immediately begin accepting and processing applications from public hospitals for mortgage insurance, with the expectation that regulations will be in effect by the time the final commitment is required.

While this amendment does not include any statutory changes to the public housing performance funding system, I am concerned that the Department's present effort to apply new standards retroactively to recapture so-called excess investment income is bad policy, as well as unlawful and inequitable. According to the regulations and handbooks in effect when the public housing authorities developed their budgets for authority, fiscal years 1980 through 1983, a public housing authority was to estimate income earned from investments based on their judgement, their past experience and what would be considered reasonable. These budgets were reviewed and approved by HUD personnel. Now, 4 years later, HUD through a field memorandum, is directing public housing authorities to compare the difference between the projected and actual investment income and to recalculate those estimates using the 91-day Treasury bill rate in existence on the date when the budget was originally developed.

I was very pleased to see that in its August 31, 1984, memorandum, the Department decided not to retroactively apply a new standard to procedures used for calculating the rental income estimate used in the performance funding system. This principle should be followed with regard to investment and other income estimates. As long as public housing authorities made a good faith effort to follow the regulations in effect when they prepared their budgets they should not have their operating subsidies reduced. If HUD believes the standards, regulations and directions used in the past need revision, then regulatory or statutory changes should be proposed and applied prospectively. The retroactive application of new more specific guidelines, as proposed in the August 31 and earlier memoranda is unlawful and unfair. I fully expect that the Secretary will not implement an inequitable and retroactive recapture policy.

Mr. Speaker, S. 2819, as amended, is our effort to make technical corrections to our housing authorizations bill of last year and to provide greater policy direction than we were able to give last year because of the sharing of the legislative process and that major piece of housing legislation enacted as part of a larger national financial legislation that it was attached to.

I urge Members to support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I am including a section-by-section analysis of the legislation for the information of my colleagues:

HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1984—SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY

TITLE I—TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS TO THE HOUSING AND URBAN-RURAL RECOVERY ACT OF 1983

Community and neighborhood development and conservation

Section 101(a)(1)—CDBG definition of an urban county: Amends Section 102(a)(4) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, as amended, to permit local governments that attain metropolitan city status in 1984 or 1985 to be included in an urban county CDBG program by deferring metropolitan status for fiscal years 1984, 1985, and 1986 if it notifies the Secretary that it has elected to do so.

Section 101(a)(2)—CDBG definition of an urban county:

(A) Amends Section 102(a)(6) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, as amended, to clarify that urban counties which have lost population because units of general local government have either elected to be excluded from the county's population or have not renewed a cooperation agreement with the county will not be permitted to continue to be eligible as an urban county after fiscal year 1983; and

(B) & (C) Clarifies that to qualify for entitlement status growing urban counties must include the population of unincorporated areas that are not units of general local government as well as units of general local government (excluding the population of metropolitan cities located within the county).

Section 101(a)(3)—CDBG definition of low and moderate income:

(A) Amends Section 102(a)(20) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, as amended, to define low and moderate income as families and individuals whose incomes do not exceed 80 percent of the area median income, as determined by the HUD Secretary with adjustments for smaller and larger families; defines persons of low income as families and individuals whose incomes do not exceed 50 percent of the area median income; defines persons of moderate income as families and individuals whose incomes exceed 50 percent, but not 80 percent, of area median income, and clarifies that the area involved shall be determined in the same manner as it is determined for the Section 8 housing assistance program; and

(B) Clarifies that the Secretary may adjust higher or lower the percentages of median income for any area if found to be necessary because of unusually high or low family incomes.

Section 101(a)(4)—Government Buildings: Corrects a spelling error in Sec. 102(a)(21) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, as amended.

Section 101(a)(5)—Citizen notice and comment: Amends Section 104(a)(2)(E) of the 1974 Act, as amended, to clarify that the public notice and opportunity for comment requirements also apply to any substantive changes proposed in the method of distribution of a state's CDBG program funds.

Section 101(a)(6)—Definition of moderate income: Amends Section 104(b)(5)(B) of the 1974 Act, as amended, to conform the term used to describe moderate income persons.

Section 101(a)(7)—Definition of unit of general local government: Amends Section 104(d) of the 1974 Act, as amended, to conform term unit of general local government in the grantee performance and evaluation report provisions.

Section 101(a)(8)—CDBG eligible activities: Amends Section 105(a)(8) of the 1974 Act, as amended, to clarify that either fiscal year 1982 or fiscal year 1983 may be used in calculating the percentage of public service activity under the CDBG program; and clarifies in Section 105(a)(15) that grants made to organizations that have provided shared housing opportunities for elderly families are eligible CDBG activities.

Section 101(a)(9)—Eligible for area-wide activities: Amends Section 105(c)(2) of the 1974 Act, as amended, to clarify that localities having no or few areas with a majority of low and moderate residents, area-wide CDBG activities will be considered to principally benefit low and moderate income persons if, in addition to serving an area generally and being designed to meet the needs of low and moderate income residents, the area serviced by the activity ranks among the top 25 percent of all areas within a community's jurisdiction having the highest concentration of low and moderate income residents.

Section 101(a)(10)—State-run program: Amends Section 106(d)(2)(A) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, as amended, to correct a misplaced portion of the text.

Section 101(a)(11)—Permissible administrative costs: Amends Section 106(d)(3) of the 1974 Act, as amended, to allow states to use CDBG funds to cover part of the cost of administration of Section 17 rental rehabilitation activities in non-metropolitan areas in the same way and to the same extent as is permitted under the state run CDBG program.

Section 101(a)(12)—Urban renewal program income: Amends Section 112 of the 1974 Act by:

(A) Deleting the general provision concerning the retention of urban renewal project income;

(B) Providing that Baltimore, Maryland, is authorized to retain any land disposition proceeds from closed-out urban renewal projects not paid to HUD, for use in accordance with the requirements of the CDBG program. Baltimore shall retain such funds in a lump sum and shall be able to use and retain all past and future earnings, including interest; and

(C) Providing that the City of Denver is authorized to retain funds from certain urban renewal project proceeds provided they are used to fund eligible CDBG activities in accordance with the requirements of the CDBG program.

Section 101(a)(13)—Urban homesteading: Amends Section 810(f) of the 1974 Act, as amended, to clarify that states must also make accessible to the public listings of unoccupied properties.

Section 101(b)—Conforming corrections: Makes technical and conforming corrections to the text of Sections 110 and 123 of the Housing and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983.

Housing assistance programs

Section 102(a)(1)—Section 235 Homeownership Loan Program: Amends Section 235(h)(1) of the National Housing Act, as amended, to clarify the HUD Secretary's authority to enter into new contracts for assistance payments under the Section 235 program through fiscal year 1985.

Section 102(a)(2)—Section 236 Assistance: Amends Section 236(f)(4) of the National Housing Act, as amended, to clarify that HUD is to provide sufficient payments to cover 90 percent of the necessary rent increases and changes in tenants income, subject to available Section 5(c) authority.

Section 102(b)(1)—Adjustments to Tenants Income: Amends Section 3(b)(5) of the U.S. Housing Act of 1937, as amended, to clarify that attendant care and auxiliary expenses can be deducted from income as a medical expense in excess of 3 percent of the family's income when such care is necessary to enable a family member, including a disabled or handicapped family member, to be gainfully employed.

Section 102(b)(2)—Public Housing New Construction Priorities: Amends Section 6(j) of the 1937 Housing Act, as amended, to clarify that the HUD Secretary shall give a priority to projects which involve the construction, acquisition, or acquisition and rehabilitation of housing suitable for occupancy by large families requiring three or more bedrooms.

Section 102(b)(3)—Reporting Requirements: Amends Section 6(m) of the 1937 Housing Act, as amended, to make a technical change in the public housing agency in the reporting requirements.

Section 102(b)(4)—Renewal of Section 8 Contracts: Amends Section 8(d)(2) of the 1937 Housing Act, as amended, to clarify that in addition to any other cases in which the HUD Secretary attaches a Section 8 contract to the structure, a Section 8 contract may be attached to the structure if (A) the Secretary and the public housing agency approve such action; and (B) the owner agrees to rehabilitate the structure other than with assistance authorized by the 1937 Housing Act and complies with Section 8 requirements.

Section 102(b)(5)—Assistance Contracts for Property Disposition: Amends Section 8(e)(2) of the 1937 Housing Act, as amended, to provide that the HUD Secretary shall increase the amount of Section 8 moderate rehabilitation assistance if the Secretary determines such increase is necessary to assist in the sale of HUD-held multifamily housing projects in order to ensure the availability of units in these projects for lower income persons.

Section 102(b)(6)—Single Room Occupancy Housing: Amends Section 8(n) of the 1937 Housing Act, to clarify an improper section reference.

Section 102(b)(7)—Voucher Demonstration: Amends Section 8(o)(3)(A) of the 1937 Housing Act, as amended, to clarify that voucher assistance payments may also be made for a low-income family participating in the rental rehabilitation program.

Section 102(b)(8)—Voucher Demonstration: Amends Section 8(o)(7)(D) of the 1937 Housing Act to clarify the term unit of general local government as used in the voucher demonstration program.

Section 102(c)(1)—Section 202 Elderly & Handicapped Housing: Amends Section 202(a)(4)(B)(i) of the Housing Act of 1959, as amended, to clarify the authorization of such sums as may be approved in an appropriation Act for the Section 202 program for Fiscal Year 1985.

Section 102(c)(2)—Section 202 Housing: Amends Section 202(h) of the 1959 Housing Act to correct punctuation within text.

Section 102(c)(3)—Section 202 Selection of a Contractor: Amends Section 202(1) of the 1959 Housing Act to clarify that the HUD Secretary shall not impose different requirements or standards with respect to construction change orders, increases in loan amount to cover change orders, errors in plans and specifications, and use of contingency funds, because of the method of contractor selection used by the Section 202 sponsor or borrower.

Section 102(d)—Section 101 Rent Supplement Program: Amends Section 101(g) of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965, to clarify that HUD is to provide sufficient payments to cover 90 percent of the necessary rent increases and changes in tenants income, subject to available Section 5(c) authority.

Section 102(e)—Rural Housing Preservation Grants: Amends Section 213(d)(2) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 to clarify a reference to the Section 533 Rural Housing Preservation Grant Program.

Section 102(f)—Congregate housing program: Amends Section 411(a)(4) of the Congregate Housing Services Act of 1978, as amended, to conform punctuation within text.

Section 102(g)(1)—Emergency shelter program: Amends Section 216 of the 1983 HURRA to clarify reference to the terms, "Secretary of Housing and Urban Development" and "section" within text.

Section 102(g)(2)—Report on neighborhood strategy area program: Amends Section 220 of the 1983 HURRA to clarify the references to the term, "Secretary of Housing and Urban Development" within text.

Section 102(g)(3)—Utility payments in assisted housing: Amends Section 221 of the 1983 HURRA to clarify that any payment made in lieu of any rental payment by a tenant in a lower income housing project shall be considered to be a rental payment.

Rental housing rehabilitation and production program

Section 103(a)—Program authority: Amends Section 17(a)(1)(A) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, to delete reference to States and units of general local government to clarify program authority.

Section 103(d)(3)—New construction and substantial rehabilitation grants: Amends Section 17(d)(5)(H) of the 1937 Housing Act, as amended, to read "families with children, particularly families requiring 3 or more bedrooms" to clarify that an equitable share of the rehabilitation grants goes to assist the housing needs of families requiring 3 or more bedrooms.

Section 103(e)(1)—Rental rehabilitation grant program: Amends Section 17(e)(1) of the 1937 Housing Act to conform subsection to clarify that states may administer a state rental rehabilitation program in communities and areas which are not receiving formula allocations.

Section 103(e)(2)—Rental rehabilitation grant program: Amends Section 17(e)(2) of the 1937 Housing Act by redesignating subsection reference to clarify that States may elect not to administer the rental rehabilitation grant program.

Section 103(f)—Preservation, environmental policy, and labor standards: Amends Section 17(i)(3) of the 1937 Housing Act, as amended, to conform the term project within the text.

Section 103(g)—Program definitions:

(1) Amends Section 17(k)(5)(A) of the 1937 Housing Act, as amended, to read "resources under subsection (b), and any unit of general local government receiving resources under subsection (d)" to clarify that grantee means any city or urban county receiving rental rehabilitation allocations and any unit of local government receiving development grant funds;

(2) Amends Section 17(k)(5)(B) of the 1937 Housing Act, as amended, by redesignating subsection reference to clarify that grantee means any State administering a state rental rehabilitation or development grant program;

(3) Amends Section 17(k)(5)(C) of the 1937 Housing Act, as amended, by redesignating subsection reference to clarify that grantee means any unit of general local government which receives assistance from the HUD Secretary under the State rental rehabilitation program;

(4) Amends Section 17(k) of the 1937 Housing Act, as amended, by inserting new paragraphs which define (6) the term "State" to mean each of the several States and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico; (7) defines the term "unit of general local government" to mean (A) any city, country, town, township, parish, village, or other general purpose political subdivision of a State; (B) any Indian tribe; and (C) the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and any other territory or possession of the United States; and (8) defines the terms "city", "Indian tribes, and "urban country" for the purposes of the rental rehabilitation and development grant programs with the same meanings as set forth in the CDBG program.

Section 103(h)—Program review and audit: Amends Section 17(l)(1) of the 1937 Housing Act, as amended, to redesignate a subsection reference to clarify the authority under which a State may conduct a rental rehabilitation program.

Section 103(i)—Inapplicability of certain provisions: Amends Section 17 of the 1937 Act, as amended, to provide a new subsection which makes the following 1937 Act provisions inapplicable to the rental rehabilitation and development grant program as authorized by this section: Section 3(a), Section 3(b)(1), the third sentence of Section 3(b)(3), Section 3(b)(7), and the last sentence of Section 6(a).

Program amendments and extensions

Section 104(a)(1)—Section 232 heading change: Amends Section 232 of the National Housing Act, as amended, to conform punctuation of the Section 232 heading.

Section 104(a)(2)—Mortgage insurance for condominium units: Amends Section 234(k) of the National Housing Act to permit FHA mortgage insurance for units in projects converted to condominiums if an application for a commitment was made for any unit in the project, or any unit received a case number under direct endorsement, or an application for approval was made under the veteran's housing program was in the process before April 20, 1984.

Section 104(a)(3)—Section 235 program: Amends Section 235(j)(2)(C) of the National Housing Act to provide that the HUD Secretary shall set the interest rate for Section 235 mortgages for housing purchasing by a nonprofit organization, public body or agency.

Section 104(a)(4)—Section 236 program: Amends Section 236(j)(4)(B) of the National Housing Act to provide that the HUD Secretary shall set the interest rate for a mortgage under the Section 236 program.

Section 104(a)(5)—Section 526 heading change: Amends Section 526 of the National Housing Act, as amended, to correct punctuation of the Section 526 heading.

Section 104(a)(6)—Amount of insured mortgages: Amends Section 531 of the National Housing Act, as amended, to clarify that the provisions in the limitations on insuring authority refer to insured mortgage commitments under the National Housing Act.

Section 104(a)(7)—Mortgage insurance for group practice facilities: Amends Section 1101(c)(4) of the National Housing Act to provide that interest rate for mortgage insurance for group practice facilities may be an interest rate agreed upon by the mortgagee and the mortgagee.

Section 104(b)—Legislative review: Amends Section 7(o)(6)(C) of the Department of Housing and Urban Development Act to clarify that the 7(o) provisions concerning Congressional review of rules and regulations do not apply to the Secretary's authority to set interest rates for the Sections 235 and 236 programs.

Section 104(c)—National Housing Partnership: Amends Section 906(a) of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 to permit the National Housing Partnership, in order to generate income to support housing for low and moderate income families, to expand its activities by committing up to 25 percent of its equity to activities related to the construction, sale or financing of housing and to the design and the development of commercial, industrial or retail facilities not directly related to housing.

Section 104(d)(1)—Solar Energy and Energy Conservation Bank: Amends Section 514(b)(5)(A) of the Solar Energy and Energy Conservation Bank Act, as amended, to correct the text to refer to grants rather than loans.

Section 104(d)(2)—Solar Energy and Energy Conservation Bank: Amends Section

520(b)(5) of the Solar Bank Act, as amended, to require the Solar Bank to establish in regulation the criteria and their relative weights for an annual allocation of the available financial assistance among eligible financial institutions and to provide that such financial assistance shall be allocated at the same time. Also provides that the HUD Secretary shall issue the regulations not later than 90 days after enactment of this Act.

Section 104(e)(1)—Coinsurance limits: Amends Section 401(e) of the Housing and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983 to delete an incorrect provision.

Section 104(e)(2)—Solar Energy Bank: Amends Section 463 of the 1983 HURRA to correct subsection designations within the text.

Section 104(e)(3)—GNMA commitment extension: Amends Section 482 of the 1983 HURRA to correct a section reference.

Section 104(f)—Mortgage insurance for public hospitals: Requires HUD to issue regulations not later than October 31, 1984, to implement the FHA insurance program for public hospitals as provided for in HURRA.

Rural housing

Section 105(a)—Definition of Income:

(1) Amends Section 501(b)(4) of the Housing Act of 1949 to make clear that in establishing income eligibility limits that will apply to the rural housing programs the Secretary of HUD shall consult with the Secretary of Agriculture and that such limits shall be established taking into consideration the subsidy characteristics and purposes of the rental and homeownership assistance programs to which such limits are applied.

(2) Amends Section 501(b)(5) of the Housing Act of 1949 to clarify that for the purposes of the rural housing assistance programs (a) the Secretary of HUD shall consult with the Secretary of Agriculture in defining income under Section (3)(b)(4) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 and (b) adjusted income will be the same as it is defined in Section 3(b)(5) of the United States Housing Act of 1937.

Section 105(b)—Section 502 Very Low and Low Income Funding Set-Asides: Amends Section 502(b) of the Housing Act of 1949 to require that (1) at least forty percent of the funds available from appropriations for Section 502 loans be set aside and made available by the Farmers Home Administration for families and persons with incomes of fifty percent or less than the median income of the area; and (2) that not less than thirty percent of the Section 502 loan funds allocated to each state be made available only to such very low income families or persons.

Section 105(c)—Administrative Authorities: Amends Section 510(e) of the Housing Act of 1949 to make a grammatical correction to the property disposition provisions.

Section 105(d)(1)—Prohibition on the Transfer of Housing Included and Guaranteed Loan Authority: Amends Section 513(a) of the Housing Act of 1949 to prohibit the transfer of any loan authority authorized under Title V to any other purpose.

Section 105(e)(1)—Conditions for Section 515 Loans With State or Local Rental Assistance Contracts: Amends Section 515(k)(2)(B) of the Housing Act of 1949 as amended to eliminate the requirement that Section 515 loans for low income rental housing projects with state or local rental assistance shall only be approved if the project can be found to be economically feasible without rental assistance.

Section 105(e)(2)—Low and Very Low Income Occupancy Limits in Rural Projects: Amends Section 515(o) of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended, to remove a redundant provision in paragraph (3).

Section 105(g)—Definition of Rural Area: Corrects Section 520 of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended, to assure that areas defined as eligible rural areas continue to be eligible through fiscal year 1985.

Section 105(h)—Utilization of Rental Assistance Payment Authority: Amends Section 521(d)(1) of the Housing Act of 1949 to provide that available rental assistance funds shall be applied by the Secretary first, to existing FmHA rental housing projects to extend expiring rental assistance contracts or to provide additional amounts necessary to assure full funding of the remaining period existing contracts, secondly, to new rental projects under Sections 514, 515 or 516 that have received commitments after fiscal year 1983 to assist very low income persons or families, except that not more than 5 percent of the units assisted with such payments in these projects shall be for low income persons other than very low income persons; and thirdly, any rental assistance payment authority that remains, after being made available as specified above for existing and new projects, can be used to assist additional eligible tenants in rental projects that already are receiving rental assistance payments.

EXPLANATION OF TITLE II OF HOUSE AMENDMENT TO S. 2819, SEPTEMBER 10, 1984

Title II of the bill contains technical and conforming amendments to those provisions of the housing and community development laws not affected by title I.

Section 201 conforms references to the Secretary of Health and Human Services and Secretary of Education. The Department of Education Organization Act (Pub. L. 96-88; 20 U.S.C. 3401 et seq.) established the Departments of Health and Human Services and Education from HEW. However, the references to HEW in the housing and community development laws have never been updated to reflect this change. In addition, section 306 of the Department of Education Organization Act transferred the functions of HUD relating to college housing loans to the Secretary of Education, without amending title IV of the Housing Act of 1950 to reflect that transfer. This section, then, corrects the housing and community development laws to reflect the effect of the reorganizations and transfers effectuated by the Department of Education Organization Act.

Section 202 conforms cross-references to title 5 of the United States Code. Public Law 89-554 codified title 5 of the United States Code. However, the references to title 5 provisions in the housing and community development laws have never been updated to reflect that codification. Most important of these are the references to the Administrative Procedure Act, which should now refer to subchapter II of chapter 5, and chapter 7, of title 5. This section corrects these references.

Section 203 conforms cross-references to title 31 of the United States Code. Public Law 97-258 codified title 31 of the United States Code. However, the references to title 31 provisions in the housing and community development laws have never been updated to reflect that codification (except for a few corrections included in HURRA '83). Most important of these are the references to the Second Liberty Bond Act and the Government Corporation Control Act. This section corrects these references.

Section 204 contains miscellaneous technical corrections to housing and community development laws other than the provisions of, and amendments made by, the Housing and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983. This section corrects certain spelling, grammatical, and section designation errors in the housing and community development laws. Section headings are also provided for certain sections of law in which they were inadvertently omitted. Furthermore, references to prior names of the Banking Committees are corrected.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] has consumed 2 minutes.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment to S. 2819, Technical Corrections to the Housing and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983.

Last November, this body passed a legislative package involving housing authorizations and IMF funding. In the course of the 11th-hour negotiations with the administration and the Senate to produce that compromise, several technical oversights managed to escape us. Accordingly, title I of this bill makes essential technical amendments to the Housing and Urban Rural Recovery Act of 1983 to conform to the agreed compromise. These amendments have been developed by House and Senate staff and, to the extent possible, with input from the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

This legislation represents an honest effort on the part of both majority and minority to preserve the technical and noncontroversial thrust of those needed amendments. The bill contains no new programs and in only one instance—the section 235 program—do we extend the life of a program. In that case, there was agreement last year to continue the program but the date was not changed in the final draft.

The technical amendments will correct what could otherwise be a very costly and legally confusing situation for HUD. OMB and HUD don't support all elements of this bill, nor do I. In fact, only yesterday did the administration decide to let us know the extent of their concern about a few of the points in the bill. However, I strongly believe that agreements are made to be honored. I don't believe that this legislation breaches any agreements made in good faith last November: to oppose this bill would breach the agreements.

Title II of this bill represents nothing more than "housekeeping" amendments to other housing and community development laws which have been on the books for some time. These changes are necessitated by changes in other statutes that affect laws under the jurisdiction of the Banking Committee, such as making all references to the "Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare" refer to the "Secretary of Health and Human Services." These are truly technical amendments and deserve to be in legislation of this nature.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this bill. I am supporting it even though I don't support every amendment. The spirit of these amendments was included in the compromise we reached last November. I believe, as honorable men and women, we are bound by that agreement. I have told my friends in the majority and my friends in the administration that there will be ample opportunity in the next session to change the substance of the 1983 legislation. That is the way we normally operate. The intent of our action today and similar action in the other body is only to meet the terms of our agreement. I would point out also that if we fail to pass this technical corrections bill, it is estimated that the cost to the taxpayers could be embarrassing. In one instance alone, we may be talking about as much as $200 million. I urge my colleagues to pass S. 2819.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to elaborate on some of the major provisions of this legislation to clarify the previously agreed upon intentions of the Banking Committee.

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

One of the major provisions of the Housing and Urban Rural Recovery Act of 1983 pertaining to the Community Development Block Grant Program, stipulates that CDBG Program funds should be focused on activities that directly benefit low- and moderate-income persons or if the activity is a general one in areas where low- and moderate-income persons are in the majority. The present statutory provision provides an exception for jurisdictions only if there are no concentrations of lower income persons. The net result is that jurisdictions that have one or two such areas are forced to spend all their funds in such areas regardless of the size of those areas and the plight of other low-income areas within the jurisdiction. While I believe the congressional intent of targeting aid to lower income areas should be maintained, it obviously was not our intent to prohibit funding in deserving areas if there were only a few areas that met the criteria. Accordingly, the technical amendment amends the statute to reflect that jurisdictions with no area with a majority of low- and moderate-income residents or so few such areas that in the Secretary's opinion the intent of the statute is not being carried out, may still qualify for areawide community development activities if the areas that are served are among the top 25 percent of all areas within a community's jurisdiction having the highest concentration of low- and moderate-income persons.

Since enactment of the Housing and Urban Rural Recovery Act, various bills have been introduced by my colleagues to correct what was clearly an unforeseen result. This technical amendment addresses those concerns. I must add that we had anticipated having a technical corrections bill passed by Congress earlier in this session. We are now getting close to the time that some urban counties must requalify for another 3-year cycle. To this end, it is expected that HUD will provide some reasonable additional time to those counties who are in the process of requalifying to go back to their areas in view of this statutory change to determine if other areas in the community may now qualify.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment would also severely limit the application of a provision contained in S. 2819 dealing with the proceeds from the sale of urban renewal properties. The legislation Congress passed last fall set certain parameters regarding moneys realized from an urban renewal grant. In an effort to clarify those provisions, which were evidently viewed by some as being too vague, the Senate amended the 1983 amendments to include local public agencies among those eligible to retain program income. The administration has problems with this, and under various scenarios, ran the cost of the amendment up to a worst-case figure of $236 million.

Mr. Speaker, there may be no cost to the Federal Government because the low side of their scenario was zero. In any event, the amendment offered here redirects the funds to units of local government and limits the applicability to two cities who have meritorious claims. It is not clear as to what the cost for those two cities could be, but it would be some place between $10 and $36 million. In addition, it should be noted that this is not new funding authority but funds that would be expected to be paid back to the Treasury.

HOUSING ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS AND RENTAL REHABILITATION AND DEVELOPMENT GRANT PROGRAMS

The technical corrections to the Housing Assistance Programs and the new section 17 program primarily involve typographical and citational corrections. There are some extensions and clarifications to various program provisions. While the minority is in general agreement with most of the provisions, the following should be emphasized.

First, the bill corrects the extension date of the section 235 program, by extending the Secretary's authority to enter into new contracts for section 235 assistance to September 30, 1985. This is consistent with the 2-year extension of other housing programs contained in the Housing and Urban Rural Recovery Act of 1983. While one could question the need for the section 235 program, the agreement was made to extend it and the extending language was inadvertently dropped from last year's bill. In addition, subsequent appropriation measures have appropriated the funds so we are not talking about additional money. However, as the section 235 program has been subject to past abuses costing the Federal Government millions of dollars in defaulted mortgage payments, it is expected that HUD will monitor carefully the implementation of this new authority.

Second, the bill authorizes the Secretary to make necessary adjustments to the section 8 moderate rehabilitation rent limits in order to effectuate the implementation of the property disposition program while ensuring the ability to utilize the units as low-income housing subsidized units. This change was necessitated by the repeal of the section 8, New Construction and Substantial Rehabilitation Program. As a result, section 8 substantial rehabilitation can no longer be used in HUD's multifamily property disposition program.

Mr. Speaker, based on HUD's previous very limited program activity pertaining to substantial rehabilitation in conjunction with property disposition, it appears that the repeal of section 8 substantial rehabilitation will have no ill effect on HUD's implementation of multifamily property disposition. The existing statutory provisions of sections 8 (c)(1) and (e)(2) of the U.S. Housing Act of 1937 provide HUD sufficient authority to make the necessary rental adjustments to assure continued rent subsidies for those previously subsidized units. This provision then is probably not necessary but it does raise a question about the potential costs of this program. While no one disagrees with preserving low-income housing resources, there is a public policy question of "at what cost?" This technical provision unfortunately does not answer that question. At what point, Mr. Speaker, will the taxpayers say "enough?" Repairs of $60,000, $70,000, $80,000 per unit? Monthly subsidy costs of $800 per unit, $1,000 per unit? At some point, a decision must be made to utilize other resources. I hope our committee will address that question next year.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, the 1983 housing authorization bill defines adjusted income, and includes certain exclusions from income. Since the enactment of the bill, questions have arisen pertaining to the applicability of attendant care and auxiliary apparatus expenses that may be necessary to enable a family member to be gainfully employed, including the gainful employment of a disabled or handicapped family member. The apparent confusion exists due to the fact that section 3(b)(5)(C) of the U.S. Housing Act of 1937 provides an exclusion for medical expenses in excess of 3 percent with no mention of unusual expenses which have previously been addressed in HUD occupancy guidelines. It had always been our intention to provide necessary compensation for reasonable attendant care and auxiliary apparatus expenses to assist employment opportunities of disabled or handicapped family members. Auxiliary apparatus is intended to be limited to vans to transport the handicapped and wheelchairs and other auxiliary equipment the Secretary so determines is necessary to assist in employment opportunities. This should be clear as a result of this legislation.

Finally, a clarifying amendment is being made to section 223(e) of the Housing and Urban Rural Recovery Act of 1983 pertaining to preconditions for competitive bidding of construction contracts under the section 202 program. This amendment is necessary to carry out the original congressional intent that sponsors of section 202 housing for the elderly and handicapped have an unfettered choice of contractor selection methods if they meet the statutory criteria specified in the 1983 act.

Since the enactment of the 1983 act, HUD has issued guidelines which prevent HUD loan proceeds from being used for the cost of change orders in connection with negotiated construction contracts. Moreover, the construction contract is amended for sole-source negotiated contracts imposing certain warranties by the contractor with respect to the drawings and specifications and requires that the contractor agree to assume full responsibility for any increased costs resulting from changes in the contract document. This requirement does not exist in other HUD-insured programs. Why should things be different for section 202 sponsors, who, within the existing statutory criteria, choose to negotiate with an individual contractor?

While HUD should be commended for its efforts to contain costs in the section 202 program, HUD should not impose different requirements with regard to construction change orders so as to coerce sponsors in using competitive bidding rather than negotiated bidding. Equal treatment with regard to change orders should be provided no matter which contractor selection method is used.

Due to the significant differences in both the House and Senate versions of the new section 17, Rental Rehabilitation and Housing Development Grant Program, the final negotiated compromise did not accurately reflect certain agreed upon intentions of both the House and Senate. While the staff suggested amendments to the Housing Development Grant Program, it was decided to defer any further legislative efforts until the Department of Housing and Urban Development had a chance to review public comments in response to the interim regulation and obtain other program experiences based on an evaluation of the first round of applications.

Therefore, the scope of the changes pertaining to the section 17 program primarily involve the deletion of superfluous language and corrections of typographic and citational errors. In addition, clarifications are made to permit Indian tribes and insular areas to be eligible for development grants, and to permit the State program for rental rehabilitation to operate in any area other than within the jurisdictions of formula allocation grantees and rural areas.

FHA PROGRAM AMENDMENTS AND EXTENSIONS

This section provides clarifications pertaining to condominium conversion restrictions, Charter of the National Housing Partnerships, and the allocation of resources for the Solar Energy and Energy Conservation Bank.

Section 420(c) of HURRA imposes new restrictions on the use of mortgage insurance for individual condominium units in projects that were converted from rental housing. This amendment provides some relief to developers having condominium conversions in process when section 234(k) of the National Housing Act was enacted. These developers, as well as prospective purchasers of condominium units, may be adversely affected by the imposition of these new restrictions. The technical amendment contained in this legislation provides that if an application for mortgage insurance for any unit was filed with HUD before April 20, 1984, all other units in the same project would be eligible for mortgage insurance without regard to the section 234(k) restrictions.

Mr. Speaker, both the House and Senate authorization bills contained provisions amending the charter of the national housing partnerships. Through an oversight, the compromise version was not included in the final bill. This provision implements the previous agreement by authorizing NHP to design, develop, manufacture, and sell products and services for use in the construction, sale, or financing of housing, and design, and develop commercial, industrial, or retail facilities that are directly not related to housing, except that the total equity commitment of the corporation to commercial, industrial, and retail facilities that are not directly related to a housing project shall not exceed 25 percent of its equity commitment to housing activities. The production and preservation of housing primarily for the benefit of families and individuals of low and moderate income shall remain to be the primary purpose of the corporation.

SOLAR BANK

Mr. Speaker, the Solar Energy and Energy Conservation Bank was established by title V of the Energy Security Act of 1980 to encourage energy conservation and the application of solar technology to lessen this country's dependence on imported oil and other foreign energy sources. While the bank is authorized to provide subsidies directly to financial institutions, HUD has elected to use the States as intermediaries. There has been concern over the procedures and criteria for making funding allocations under the Solar Bank Program. The House amendment clarifies the fund allocation procedure by requiring the solar bank to establish in regulation the criteria and their relative weights for an annual allocation of the available assistance.

RURAL HOUSING

This section clarifies provisions contained in the Housing and Urban Rural Recovery Act of 1983 to permit the Farmers Home Administration, Section 502, Low Income Homeownership Loan Program, to operate more effectively in view of last year's targeting provisions. Currently, the statute requires that nationally not less than 40 percent of subsidized homes in section 502, and 30 percent in each State be available only for occupancy by very low-income families. The intent was to get more funds to the truly needy.

Unfortunately, last year's targeting provision has not achieved the results we had intended. Whether through lack of available low-cost housing or because the ceiling of 50 percent or below of area median income is simply too low to actually qualify a homeowner, the Farmers Home Administration is having a difficult time meeting the 40-percent target. As a result, neither the very low-income funds or the low-income funds are being fully utilized because Farmers Home claims there is a linkage between the two.

The technical amendment solves that problem by establishing two funding categories. A set-aside is established in which at least 40 percent of the funds are for subsidized home loans to very low-income families. In addition, not less than 30 percent of funds allocated to States are required to be set aside for use only by very low-income families. This requirement does not preclude FmHA from pooling and reallocating any unused funds from such a State set-aside so long as the funds remain available only for low-income families.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. McKINNEY] has consumed 3 minutes.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER].

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to engage in a colloquy regarding a section of the bill so that there is no question as to congressional intent when the act is carried out.

I hope my understanding of the provision is correct; because an expensive legal battle is being waged against the Denver Urban Renewal Authority by HUD. While DURA has won the first round of court battles, I would hate to see taxpayer dollars being spent on attorney's fees, rather than to provide the housing, community development, and urban renewal assistance so badly needed in Denver. This provision, already adopted by the Senate, will put an end to that court battle and let the funds be spent where they are most needed.

The section authorizes the city of Denver, CO, to receive and use for housing, urban renewal, and community development purposes, certain funds earned by the Denver Urban Renewal Authority in its administration of the Skyline Urban Renewal project. The Skyline funds consist of all moneys received by the Denver Urban Renewal Authority as income from parking lots, as receipts from the sale of land, air, and subsurface rights in the Skyline area, and other funds resulting from the Skyline project retained by the Denver Urban Renewal Authority, as well as all interest earned on the investment of such moneys. As used in this section, receive means that the city of Denver may hold the Skyline funds as its own property, to invest, dispose of or expend the funds and any interest the funds may earn in the future. The only restriction on Denver's retention, investment, disposition, or use of the funds is that the funds must be used in accordance with the requirements of the Community Development Block Grant Program as specified in title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974. It is clear from that act that the Department of Housing and Urban Development does not have the authority to approve or disapprove of the expenditure of those funds in advance as long as city specifies their use in their annual CDBG proposal and these funds in addition to all funds received under the CDBG Program principally benefit low- and moderate-income families and the city complies with the moderate income families and the city complies with the certification and other requirements of the CDBG Program.

Let me extend my thanks to the chairman and this staff as well as the minority for your support and cooperation.

□ 1530

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRANK. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

The gentlewoman has correctly stated the intent of the subcommittee and of the Congress in regard to the matter she has just discussed.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE].

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment to S. 2819.

In almost 18 years in Congress, I have seen few pieces of legislation that were perfect on the first draft and questions often arise before the final product is brought before the House. Most of the time differences between the House and Senate are ironed out in a conference between the two Bodies.

Last fall we didn't have the luxury of a conference on our housing bill. The situation was such that we had to pass an IMF bill. Part of the package we agreed—include was a housing bill that was constructed without the benefit of a formal conference.

Mr. Speaker, in assessing the impact of that housing bill, it was clear that certain provisions were not working as we had thought. Viewed as a whole, these are not major matters. On the other hand, in some circumstances, and in certain localities, these are indeed major matters. An example of that is the problem some urban counties experienced in spending their CDBG funds. Many of my colleagues, including the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] have approached me and asked that we pass legislation correcting a flawed provision in last year's act on the CDBG Program. Well, here it is.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, what we present here is an attempt to correct all the faults we could identify that are noncontroversial. The other body has already passed their version. We have an amendment which I support. Our amendment is somewhat longer but that is misleading. Almost one-half of the text of this amendment has nothing to do with last year's bill. Changes are made in other housing laws under our committee's jurisdiction but they are truly technical in nature. They correct out-of-date citations or Department positions that no longer exist. It is simply an attempt to correct the text of our laws so that when a new version of the compiled laws is printed later this year it will not contain out dated references.

The changes we make to last year's bill are, for the most part, inconsequential. They have been developed in consultation with the administration and the other body. There are, however, a few provisions that are not favored by the administration. One extends the section 235 Subsidized Homeownership Program for another year. The administration is opposed to this program. So am I. On the other hand, the agreement that was reached last year did extend the program and I believe we should live up to our agreement. In addition, the funds have already been appropriated. Another provision opposed by the administration would allow certain cities to retain urban renewal income. The other body added an amendment to existing law that could be broad ranging. In excess of 150 projects would have been effected. We have severely limited the application of that amendment. In fact, projects in only two cities are now covered. The cost could be as low as $10 million as opposed to $236 million if all projects were included.

There were also questions raised about the 202 Program and some of the Farmers Home provisions. None of these, however, could in any way be construed as budget busters. The objection lies more in philosophy and even OMB admits there are two interpretations on these matters.

Mr. Speaker, in the other portions of the bill there are some very laudatory changes. I have already briefly mentioned that part of the amendment that deals with urban counties and the principally benefiting rule. Last year, as you know, we attempted to further target community development funds by requiring them to be spent either on low- and moderate-income families or in areas where low- and moderate-income individuals are in the majority. We provided an exception but the exception was so narrowly drawn that it had the effect of forcing urban counties to spend all their funds in one or two very small geographical areas while larger but deserving areas were prohibited from receiving funds. This certainly was not our intention and I am gratified that we are clearing this up with this amendment.

In addition, the amendment clarifies a provision in last year's bill dealing with attendant care costs allowed under the new definition of income. As a result of this amendment, handicapped residents of assisted housing would be permitted to deduct from their income attendant care and special transportation costs such as wheelchairs and specially modified vans.

I might also mention an amendment to the Farmers Home Administration section. Many of my colleagues will remember the problem that arose earlier this year when funds for the Farmers Home Administration 502 Homeownership Program were not being spent because of an administrative interpretation. Last year's bill targeted 40 percent of the 502 funds for very low income families. When, for various reasons, the full 40 percent of those funds could not be utilized in some States, the Department of Agriculture refused to spend the 60 percent of the remaining funds. These were funds that were to go to low-income families. The Department claimed a linkage between the two. We were able to sever the link for this year in an appropriation bill. This amendment will take care of the problem for future years.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation does have merit and is of a technical nature. It contains no new grandiose programs and has been approved by both the majority and the minority. I hope my colleagues will suspend the rules and pass S. 2819 as amended.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SISISKY].

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Speaker, I understand that these technical amendments are simply correcting oversights of the Housing and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of last year and therefore a matter of importance to my district has not been included. That matter is maintaining the community development block grant [CDBG] entitlement status of those communities which lost their status as central cities after the last census. As I understand it, 19 communities under 50,000 no longer meet the definition of central city of a metropolitan area and therefore will not be entitled for CDBG funding after fiscal year 1985. For the first time, studies of commuting patterns were used to identify central cities, and these cities were redesignated because they do not attract enough workers. Since attracting workers is a key to a healthy and vibrant economy, this methodology has eliminated some very distressed and struggling communities, which are very much in need of CDBG funding. One of these communities, the city of Hopewell, VA, is in my district. I am also speaking on behalf of my colleague, Mr. HEFNER of North Carolina, who represents the communities of Concord and Salisbury, NC, which are also affected by this change. Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate that in the crush of business the committee has limited its considerations this year to matters of immediate concern, but could you assure me that when the committee considers legislation in the next Congress, it will review the situation of these small cities as the committee conducts hearings and marks up the legislation?

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISISKY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRANK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman for his concern for his district which has led him to be so active in this regard, along with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER] and others.

The subcommittee, and I speak now after consultation with the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Texas, very much intends to address this. We share the gentleman's concern. Nine States and nineteen communities, as the gentleman has pointed out, have been so affected.

It is our intention early in the next session to have hearings and to begin legislative consideration of some remedies.

As the gentleman knows, the census data which resulted in these changes was not completed prior to our acting in 1984 and that is why we were not able to act anticipatorily, but we do intend to give very serious consideration to this. We hope we will be able to give some relief to the gentleman and to his colleagues.

I want to commend the gentleman for raising this issue.

Mr. SISISKY. I thank the gentleman.

● Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, the amendments to the Housing and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983, Public Law 98-181, contain important technical corrections and policy clarifications to that act. These are necessary because in passing Public Law 98-181, the usual procedure of a conference meeting, a conference report, and floor action was bypassed. Important omissions and technical defects which resulted must be corrected. This amendment provides those corrections and also includes clarifications of congressional intent that have been brought to our attention.

Title I of this amendment contains technical corrections to the community development block grant and the assisted housing programs administered by the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Farmers' Home Administration's rural housing programs.

A provision is included that will clear up the issue involving the principally benefit tests where areawide activities are undertaken in communities that have few or no areas with high concentrations of low- and moderate-income people. This amendment would permit community development block grant activities to be considered to benefit low- and moderate-income families if they are located among the top 25 percent of all areas within the community having the highest concentration of low- and moderate-income people. We clarify that an urban county that contained newly identified metropolitan cities can be considered an urban county entitlement community if the city defers its metropolitan classification for Community Development Block Grant Program purposes.

Among the assisted housing provisions included in this amendment the use of section 235 homeownership subsidy funds that the Congress approved will be facilitated by correcting a technical omission. Handicapped employed residents of federally assisted housing would be allowed their income attendant care costs; the HUD Secretary would be authorized to increase moderate rehabilitation section 8 assistance to assure that low-income residents can continue to live in apartments sold from the HUD inventory. And the HUD Secretary's authority to provide section 8 existing contracts on a project basis in the Loan Management and Property Disposition Program would be preserved. Both of these amendments will help in the effort to utilize to the greatest extent possible the existing housing stock in meeting our low-income housing needs. A provision adds 12 more cities that could be eligible for grants under the Rental Housing Development Program.

Title II contains other necessary technical and conforming amendments to the housing and community development laws and makes other corrections of a technical nature. In addition several provisions are included to the Farmers' Home Administration's rural housing programs. Beginning in fiscal year 1985, the transfer of rural housing loan authority to any other program would be prohibited. The unfortunate section 502 homeownership targeting issue is resolved by a provision which allows separate set-asides of section 502 authority among very low-income borrowers and low-income borrowers so that loans for one needy group of borrowers are not withheld because a loan cannot be made to a borrower from the other group. A provision would make clear that States and localities that provide rental assistance payments for low-income rural rental projects in order to obtain a section 515 rental housing loan not be required to meet other feasibility requirements than already are required by the Farmers Home Administration's Rental Assistance Payment Program.

A provision of the amendment requires the HUD Secretary to issue regulations by October 31, 1984, to implement section 436 of the 1983 amendments, which makes FHA hospital mortgage insurance available for the first time to the public hospitals.

I also am concerned about the Department's persistent effort to change the performance funding system that provides operating subsidies. I am advised that an August 31, 1984, memorandum indicates that the Department decided not to retroactively change the procedures used for calculating the rental income estimate used in the performance funding system. But I must express my real disappointment to find that HUD reneged on an agreement it made when we negotiated the 1983 Act. At that time we agreed that nonprofit section 202 elderly housing sponsors to select contractors on a negotiated basis so long as costs were low—if they were high HUD was permitted to step into the selection process. However, to my dismay HUD went ahead and proposed administrative procedures that made a mockery of its agreement. It would not back off and, therefore, we have included a provision preventing the imposition of requirements merely designed to apply because of the method of contractor selection in a nonprofit section 202 project.

I thank the subcommittee chairman, Mr. GONZALEZ, and the ranking minority member, Mr. McKINNEY, for their work on this complicated technical amendment and urge its adoption by the House.

INDIAN HOUSING ASSISTANCE

The committee is seriously concerned that the Indian Housing Program may be seriously impaired through regulations involving low-income eligibility limits, the proportion of low and very low-income families that may occupy mutual-help projects and the use of manufactured housing standards in an effort to limit the type and cost of construction for all mutual-help projects.

Income eligibility ceilings for the Indian Housing Program should be established to permit as widespread use of the Mutual-Help Housing Program as possible because it is the only program under which individual housing can be built for Indian families especially those who reside on reservations. Indian family incomes are so low that the prescribed percentages of the median used for other housing assistance would include families that could not afford homeownership and would exclude families that have almost equal housing needs but could afford to participate in the program. Also, the Mutual-Help Program should not be subject to the regulation requiring not more than 5 percent of the units in a project to be occupied by families with incomes between 50 and 80 percent of area median income. As with income ceilings, a regulation of this type would virtually stop the program contrary to the intent of the Congress. And, finally, the committee does not believe that the Congress intended to limit all Indian housing construction to a standard no higher than HUD's manufactured housing standards. The Department has indicated that it will reconsider its approach to each of these issues and the concerns of the committee, therefore, no legislative provisions addressing these issues are included in this bill.●

● Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my support for Senate bill 2819, which makes technical corrections to the Housing and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983.

This important measure clarifies a number of provisions in the housing authorization bill that was signed into law last November, and makes other minor adjustments in the housing programs addressed by this legislation.

I would like to extend my appreciation to Housing Subcommittee Chairman HENRY B. GONZALEZ for all of his hard work on this technical corrections bill. Chairman GONZALEZ has worked closely with Members from both sides of the aisle to insure that all pertinent viewpoints have been addressed in this bill. I commend him for the excellent piece of legislation he has brought to the floor of the House today.

Of particular interest to my constituents in San Joaquin County, CA, is a provision in this bill that clarifies that San Joaquin county is indeed qualified as an urban county for purposes of participation in the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development's Community Development Block Grant Program.

The county reached the population figure of 200,000 required for participation in the program in early 1982. However, because of the delay in determining the accurate count of these residents by the Census Bureau, the county was adversely affected by a technical change in the program in 1983 regarding cities designated as central cities by the Office of Management and Budget. The result of these changes was to deny San Joaquin County the deserved benefits of urban county status even now, 2 years after the county qualified for such status.

On behalf of the citizens of San Joaquin County, I would like to extend my thanks to both of these gentlemen, and to the staff of the House Subcommittee on Housing and Community Development, for all of their assistance in helping to resolve this issue.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this measure to make the law evenhanded and equitable.●

● Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment sponsored by my colleague, Chairman ST GERMAIN. This package of noncontroversial housing amendments contains language addressing a problem of particular concern to the people of New York State.

In early 1982, the State of New York developed a model proposal for combining Federal and State resources to address the housing needs of low- and moderate-income rural citizens. This proposal provides affordable housing by combining New York State rental assistance money with housing constructed through FmHA section 515 program.

This past year, regulations promulgated by FmHA were released, which made this model program all but impossible to administer. Simply stated, the problems are threefold:

First, the regulations require a market survey demonstrating that the units are marketable without a subsidy. Once the grantee demonstrates that the subsidy is unnecessary, the subsidy is denied.

Second, the regulations require the commitment of at least 25 years be made by the State of New York for rental assistance. The New York State Constitution prohibits authorizations for more than a single fiscal year.

Third, the regulations establish an inequitable funding formula that prevents the release of section 515 for otherwise eligible projects.

These regulations resulted in the fact that less than 20 percent of New York's fiscal year 1983 section 515 allocation has been released. The language in this bill will remedy these problems and allow this successful program to continue to serve the needs of my rural constituents.

I commend my colleague, Chairman ST GERMAIN, for his early attention to these problems. In addition, I want to especially commend my good friend and New York State colleague, STAN LUNDINE, for his untiring efforts as a member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.●

● Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 2819, legislation making technical corrections to the Housing and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983, now Public Law 98-181.

This legislation is essentially noncontroversial, but very important in continuing the basis thrust of many housing programs which the legislation passed at the close of the last session of Congress continued and expanded. It certainly helps meet the need for many cities throughout the United States and Puerto Rico to focus on the housing necessities of low- and moderate-income families, and to continue the Federal Government's responsibility in this area.

The Community Development Block Grant Program of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, as the legislation mandates, should continue to focus on the needs of the low- and moderate-income residents within the area affected by the CDBG program and I strongly endorse that mandate. By a minor omission in the legislation passed last year prior to adjournment, this technicality which changed this focus inadvertently would be reinstated.

In addition, the legislation contains various technical provisions which cover a variety of housing programs including the new Housing Development Grant Program of HUD which is just getting underway on the national level. A provision allowing States to use a small portion of their CDBG "State" block grant for smaller cities in helping implement the new housing rental rehabilitation program is particularly useful, it seems to me, in helping provide the much needed technical assistance for smaller communities in helping get a new program started.

I believe this legislation, which is essentially technical in nature, is important. I commend Chairman HENRY GONZALEZ of the Housing Subcommittee for his promptness in bringing this to the floor for consideration.

I urge support of S. 2819 and its speedy passage.●

● Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of S. 2819, making amendments to the Housing and Urban Recovery Act of 1983.

S. 2819 includes legislation I introduced on February 23, 1984 as H.R. 4843, and which was subsequently introduced by Senator JOHN HEINZ in the other body on February 28, 1984. The Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee has incorporated H.R. 4843 into this bill.

The section of S. 2819 I refer to amends section 105(c)(2)(B) of the Housing and Community Development Act.

Last December county and local officials in Bucks County in my congressional district alerted me to an unintended change in the 1983 law which drastically altered project eligibility rules in urban counties, such as Bucks, and neighboring Montgomery County, and several other counties in Pennsylvania. This change was forcing certain jurisdictions with low population density to concentrate community development block grant activity in few or small pockets of poverty, while ignoring the needs of most of their lower income population.

The Kostmayer/Heinz proposal—which was drafted with the assistance of the National Association of Counties and which also has the support of the National Association of Towns and Townships—will enable cities and counties with few or small concentrations of poor to meet the requirement that at least 51 percent of their CDBG spending benefit lower income persons through projects to improve areas among the top 25 percent in concentration of lower income families.

The 1983 act requires that areawide projects be in census tracts or blocks that have a majority of lower income residents, unless the jurisdiction has no such areas. The jurisdiction would then have to target spending on the 25 percent of areas with the highest proportion of lower income households. We have sought to have the exception broadened for urban counties where it would be unrealistic, and contrary to the intention of the 1983 act, to focus CDBG spending on a few, small and scattered areas where a majority of residents are lower income. Eight counties in Pennsylvania will be precluded from carrying out areawide projects in those parts of the county where most of their lower income households reside, unless the law is changed.

In Bucks County alone, the following 12 projects are at stake, according to information supplied by the county's Office of Community Development:

[In percent]
Sponsor	Project	Low/mod
Chalfont	Street improvements	49.3
Durham	Acquire Durham mill	41.0
Durham	Recreation facilities	41.0
Riegelsville	Ambulance for emergency squad	39.6
Falls	Park acquisition	44.5
Morrisville	Central area renewal	47.6
New Hope	Traffic signal	42.7
Newton Boro.	Street improvements	40.8
Richland	Recreation facility	42.0
Springfield	Springtown Community Center	44.6
Springfield	Water system	44.6
Yardley	Historic preservation	37.9

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the distinguished chairman of the Banking Committee, Mr. ST. GERMAIN, and the chairman of the Housing Subcommittee, Mr. GONZALEZ, for recognizing the urgency of this problem, and moving my legislation so that these and other deserving projects in urban counties can go forward.

I urge my colleagues to approve S. 2819.●

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 2819, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the Senate bill was amended so as to read: "An act to make technical and conforming amendments in certain laws relating to housing and community development."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

There was no objection.

SECONDARY MORTGAGE MARKET ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 1984

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill (S. 2040) to amend the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 with respect to the treatment of mortgage backed securities, to increase the authority of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 2040

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Secondary Mortgage Market Enhancement Act of 1984".

TITLE I—SECURITIES LAWS AMENDMENTS

MORTGAGE RELATED SECURITY

SEC. 101. Section 3(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)) is amended by adding the following new paragraph at the end thereof:

"(41) The term 'mortgage related security' means a security that is rated in one of the two highest rating categories by at least one nationally recognized statistical rating organization, and either:

"(A) represents ownership of one or more promissory notes or certificates of interest or participation in such notes (including any rights designed to assure servicing of, or the receipt or timeliness of receipt by the holders of such notes, certificates, or participations of amounts payable under, such notes, certificates, or participations), which notes: "(i) are directly secured by a first lien on a single parcel of real estate, including stock allocated to a dwelling unit in a residential cooperative housing corporation, upon which is located a dwelling or mixed residential and commercial structure, or on a residential manufactured home as defined in section 603(6) of the National Manufactured Housing Construction and Safety Standards Act of 1974, whether such manufactured home is considered real or personal property under the laws of the State in which it is to be located; and

"(ii) were originated by a savings and loan association, savings bank, commercial bank, credit union, insurance company, or similar institution which is supervised and examined by a Federal or State authority, or by a mortgagee approved by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development pursuant to sections 203 and 211 of the National Housing Act, or, where such notes involve a lien of the manufactured home, by any such institution or by any financial institution approved for insurance by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development pursuant to section 2 of the National Housing Act; or

"(B) is secured by one of more promissory notes or certificates of interest or participations in such notes (with or without recourse to the issuer thereof) and, by its terms, provides for payments of principal in relation to payments, or reasonable projections of payments, on notes meeting the requirements of subparagraphs (A) (i) and (ii) or certificates of interest or participations in promissory notes meeting such requirements.

For the purpose of the paragraph, the term 'promissory note', when used in connection with a manufactured home, shall also include a loan, advance, or credit sale as evidence by a retail installment sales contract or other instrument."

APPLICABILITY OF MARGIN REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 102. Section 7 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78g) is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(g) Subject to such rules and regulations as the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may adopt in the public interest and for the protection of investors, no member of a national securities exchange or broker or dealer shall be deemed to have extended or maintained credit or arranged for the extension or maintenance of credit for the purpose of purchasing a security, within the meaning of this section, by reason of a bona fide agreement for delayed delivery of a mortgage related security against full payment of the purchase price thereof upon such delivery within one hundred and eighty days after the purchase, or within such shorter period as the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may prescribe by rule or regulation."

BORROWING IN THE COURSE OF BUSINESS

SEC. 103. Section 8(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78h(a)) is amended by adding the following new sentence at the end thereof: "Subject to such rules and regulations as the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may adopt in the public interest and for the protection of investors, no person shall be deemed to have borrowed within the ordinary course of business, within the meaning of this subsection, by reason of a bona fide agreement for delayed delivery of a mortgage related security against full payment of the purchase price thereof upon such delivery within one hundred and eighty days after the purchase, or within such shorter period as the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may prescribe by rule or regulation."

MORTGAGE RELATED SECURITIES AS COLLATERAL

SEC. 104. Section 11(d)(1) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78k(d)(1)) is amended by—

(1) inserting "(i)" between "of" and "any"; and

(2) inserting the following immediately after "thirty-five days after such purchase": "or (ii) any mortgage related security against full payment of the entire purchase price thereof upon such delivery within one hundred and eighty days after such purchase, or within such shorter period as the Commission may prescribe by rule or regulation."

INVESTMENT BY DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS

SEC. 105. (a) Section 5(c)(1) of the Home Owner's Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1464(c)(1)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(S) MORTGAGE BACKED SECURITIES.—Investments in securities that—"(i) are offered and sold pursuant to section 4(5) of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77d(5)); or

"(ii) are mortgage related securities (as that term is defined in section 3(a)(41) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(41))), subject to such regulations as the Board may prescribe, including regulations prescribing minimum size of the issue (at the time of initial distribution) or minimum aggregate sales prices, or both."

(b) Section 107 of the Federal Credit Union Act (12 U.S.C. 1757) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraph (15) as paragraph (16); and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (14) the following:

"(15) to invest in securities that—

"(A) are offered and sold pursuant to section 4(5) of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77d(5)); or

"(B) are mortgage related securities (as that term is defined in section 3(a)(41) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(41))), subject to such regulations as the Board may prescribe, including regulations prescribing minimum size of the issue (at the time of initial distribution) or minimum aggregate sales prices, or both;"

(c) Section 5136 of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 24) is amended by adding at the end of paragraph Seventh the following: "The limitations and restrictions contained in this paragraph as to an association purchasing for its own account investment securities shall not apply to securities that (A) are offered and sold pursuant to section 4(5) of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77d(5)); or (B) are mortgage related securities (as that term is defined in section 3(a)(41) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(41))), subject to such regulations as the Comptroller of the Currency may prescribe, including regulations prescribing minimum size of the issue (at the time of initial distribution) or minimum aggregate sales prices, or both."

PREEMPTION OF STATE LAW

SEC. 106. (a)(1) Any person, trust, corporation, partnership, association, business trust, or business entity created pursuant to or existing under the laws of the United States or any State shall be authorized to purchase, hold, and invest in securities that are—

(A) offered and sold pursuant to section 4(5) of the Securities Act of 1933,

(B) mortgage related securities (as that term is defined in section 3(a)(41) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(41))), or

(C) securities issued or guaranteed by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation or the Federal National Mortgage Association, to the same extent that such person, trust, corporation, partnership, association, business trust, or business entity is authorized under any applicable law to purchase, hold or invest in obligations issued by or guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof.

(2) Where State law limits the purchase, holding, or investment in obligations issued by the United States by such a person, trust, corporation, partnership, association, business trust, or business entity, such securities that are—

(A) offered and sold pursuant to section 4(5) of the Securities Act of 1933,

(B) mortgage related securities (as that term is defined in section 3(a)(41) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(41))), or

(C) securities issued or guaranteed by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation or the Federal National Mortgage Association, shall be considered to be obligations issued by the United States for purposes of the limitation.

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall not apply with respect to a particular person, trust, corporation, partnership, association, business trust, or business entity or class thereof in any State that, prior to the expiration of seven years after the date of the enactment of this Act, enacts a statute that specifically refers to this section and either prohibits or provides for a more limited authority to purchase, hold, or invest in such securities by any person, trust, corporation, partnership, association, business trust, or business entity or class thereof than is provided in subsection (a). The enactment by any State of any statute of the type described in the preceding sentence shall not affect the validity of any contractual commitment to purchase, hold, or invest that was made prior thereto and shall not require the sale or other disposition of any securities acquired prior thereto.

(c) Any securities that are offered and sold pursuant to section 4(5) of the Securities Act of 1933 or that are mortgage related securities (as that term is defined in section 3(a)(41) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c(a)(41))) shall be exempt from any law of any State with respect to or requiring registration or qualification of securities or real estate to the same extent as any obligation issued by or guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof. Any State may, prior to the expiration of seven years after the date of the enactment of this Act, enact a statute that specifically refers to this section and requires registration or qualification of any such security on terms that differ from those applicable to any obligation issued by the United States.

TITLE II—SECONDARY MORTGAGE MARKET PROGRAMS

LIMITATIONS ON PARTICIPATION AGREEMENTS

SEC. 201. (a) The sixth sentence of section 302(b)(2) of the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act is amended to read as follows: "The corporation shall establish limitations governing the maximum original principal obligation of conventional mortgages that are purchased by it; in any case in which the corporation purchases a participation interest in such a mortgage, the limitation shall be calculated with respect to the total original principal obligation of the mortgage and not merely with respect to the interest purchased by the corporation."

(b) The fifth sentence of section 305(a)(2) of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation Act is amended to read as follows: "The Corporation shall establish limitations governing the maximum original principal obligation of conventional mortgages that are purchased by it; in any case in which the Corporation purchases a participation interest in such a mortgage, the limitation shall be calculated with respect to the total original principal obligation of the mortgage and not merely with respect to the interest purchased by the Corporation."

AUTHORITY OF FEDERAL HOME LOAN MORTGAGE CORPORATION TO PURCHASE LOANS ON MANUFACTURED HOMES

SEC. 202. (a) Section 302(d) of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation Act is amended by inserting after "located" the following: "or a manufactured home that is personal property under laws of the State in which the manufactured home is located."

(b) Section 302(h) of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The term 'residential mortgage' also includes a loan or advance of credit secured by a mortgage or other lien on a manufactured home that is the principal residence of the borrower, without regard to whether the security property is real, personal, or mixed."

(c) Section 302 of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(1) The term 'mortgage insurance program' includes, in the case of a residential mortgage secured by a manufactured home, any manufactured home lending program under title I of the National Housing Act."

PURCHASE OF SECOND MORTGAGES

SEC. 203. (a) Section 302(b) of the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5)(A) The corporation is authorized to purchase, service, sell, lend on the security of, and otherwise deal in (i) until October 1, 1987, conventional mortgages that are secured by a subordinate lien against a one- to four-family residence that is the principal residence of the mortgagor; and (ii) until October 1, 1985, conventional mortgages that are secured by a subordinate lien against a property comprising five or more family dwelling units. If the corporation, pursuant to paragraphs (1) through (4), shall have purchased, serviced, sold, or otherwise dealt with any other outstanding mortgage secured by the same residence, the aggregate original amount of such other mortgage and the mortgage authorized to be purchased, serviced, sold, or otherwise dealt with under this paragraph shall not exceed the applicable limitation determined under paragraph (2).

"(B) The corporation shall establish limitations governing the maximum original principal obligation of conventional mortgages described in subparagraph (A). In any case in which the corporation purchases a participation interest in such a mortgage, the limitation shall be calculated with respect to the total original principal obligation of such mortgage described in subparagraph (A) and not merely with respect to the interest purchased by the corporation. Such limitations shall not exceed (i) with respect to mortgages described in subparagraph (A)(i), 50 percent of the single-family residence mortgage limitation determined under paragraph (2); and (ii) with respect to mortgages described in subparagraph (A)(ii), the applicable limitation determined under paragraph (2).

"(C) No subordinate mortgage against one- to four-family residence shall be purchased by the corporation if the total outstanding indebtedness secured by the property as a result of such mortgage exceeds 80 percent of the value of such property unless (i) that portion of such total outstanding indebtedness that exceeds such 80 percent is guaranteed or insured by a qualified insurer as determined by the corporation; (ii) the seller retains a participation of not less than 10 percent in the mortgage; or (iii) for such period and under such circumstances as the corporation may require, the seller agrees to repurchase or replace the mortgage upon demand of the corporation in the event that the mortgage is in default. The corporation shall not issue a commitment to purchase a subordinate mortgage prior to the date the mortgage is originated, if such mortgage is eligible for purchase under the preceding sentence only by reason of compliance with the requirements of clause (ii) of such sentence."

(b)(1) Section 302(h) of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation Act is amended—

(A) in the first sentence, by striking out "first"; and

(B) by striking out "The maximum principal obligation" and all that follows through "associations," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Such term shall also include other secured loans that are secured by a subordinate lien against a property as to which the corporation may purchase a residential mortgage as defined under the first sentence of this subsection."

(2) Section 305(a) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4)(A) The Corporation is authorized to purchase, service, sell, lend on the security of, and otherwise deal in (i) until October 1, 1987, residential mortgages that are secured by a subordinate lien against a one- to four-family residence that is the principal residence of the mortgagor; and (ii) until October 1, 1985, residential mortgages that are secured by a subordinate lien against a property comprising five or more family dwelling units. If the Corporation shall have purchased, serviced, sold, or otherwise dealt with any other outstanding mortgage secured by the same residence, the aggregate original amount of such other mortgage and the mortgage authorized to be purchased, serviced, sold, or otherwise dealt with under this paragraph shall not exceed the applicable limitation determined under paragraph (2).

"(B) The Corporation shall establish limitations governing the maximum original principal obligation of such mortgages. In any case in which the Corporation purchases a participation interest in such a mortgage, the limitation shall be calculated with respect to the total original principal obligation of such mortgage secured by a subordinate lien and not merely with respect to the interest purchased by the Corporation. Such limitations shall not exceed (i) with respect to mortgages described in subparagraph (A)(i), 50 percent of the single-family residence mortgage limitation determined under paragraph (2); and (ii) with respect to mortgages described in subparagraph (A)(ii), the applicable limitation determined under paragraph (2).

"(C) No subordinate mortgage against a one- to four-family residence shall be purchased by the Corporation if the total outstanding indebtedness secured by the property as a result of such mortgage exceeds 80 percent of the value of such property unless (i) that portion of such total outstanding indebtedness that exceeds such 80 percent is guaranteed or insured by a qualified insurer as determined by the Corporation; (ii) the seller retains a participation of not less than 10 percent in the mortgage; or (iii) for such period and under such circumstances as the Corporation may require, the seller agrees to repurchase or replace the mortgage upon demand of the Corporation in the event that the mortgage is in default. The Corporation shall not issue a commitment to purchase a subordinate mortgage prior to the date the mortgage is originated, if such mortgage is eligible for purchase under the preceding sentence only by reason of compliance with the requirements of clause (iii) of such sentence."

AUTHORITY OF FEDERAL HOME LOAN MORTGAGE CORPORATION TO PURCHASE STATE AGENCY INSURED MORTGAGE LOANS

SEC. 204. Section 302(i) of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation Act is amended by striking out "a State or any agency or instrumentality of either" and inserting in lieu thereof "any of its agencies or instrumentalities".

MULTIFAMILY MORTGAGE LOAN-TO-VALUE RATIO

SEC. 205. (a) The second sentence of section 302(b)(2) of the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act is amended by inserting after "mortgage" the first place it appears the following: "secured by a property comprising one- to four-family dwelling units".

(b) The first sentence of section 305(a)(2) of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation Act is amended by inserting after "mortgages" the first place it appears the following: "secured by a property comprising one- to four-family dwelling units".

LIMITATIONS ON PURCHASE OF CONVENTIONAL MORTGAGES ON MULTIFAMILY PROPERTIES

SEC. 206. (a) Section 302(b)(2) of the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act is amended by striking out the penultimate sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "With respect to mortgages secured by property comprising five or more family dwelling units, such limitations shall not exceed 125 percent of the dollar amounts set forth in section 207(c)(3) of this Act, except that such limitations may be increased by the corporation (taking into account construction costs) to not exceed 240 percent of such dollar amounts in any geographical area for which the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development determines under such section that cost levels require any increase in the dollar amount limitations under such section."

(b) Section 305(a)(2) of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation Act is amended by striking out the penultimate sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "With respect to mortgages secured by property comprising five or more family dwelling units, such limitations shall not exceed 125 percent of the dollar amounts set forth in section 207(c)(3) of the National Housing Act, except that such limitations may be increased by the Corporation (taking into account construction costs) to not exceed 240 percent of such dollar amounts in any geographical area for which the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development determines under such section that cost levels require any increase in the dollar amount limitations under such section."

BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

SEC. 207. The first sentence of section 308(b) of the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act is amended to read as follows: "The Federal National Mortgage Association shall have a board of directors, which shall consist of eighteen persons, five of whom shall be appointed annually by the President of the United States, and the remainder of whom shall be elected annually by the common stockholders."

ANNUAL REPORT OF SECRETARY OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT ON ACTIVITIES OF FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

SEC. 208. Section 308(h) of the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act is amended by striking out the last two sentences and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Pursuant to the authority provided in this subsection, the Secretary shall, not later than June 30 of each year, report to the Congress on the activities of the corporation under this title."

PERIOD FOR APPROVAL OF ACTIONS OF FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

SEC. 209. Section 309 of the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) If the Federal National Mortgage Association submits to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, after the date of the enactment of the Secondary Mortgage Market Enhancement Act of 1984, a request for approval or other action under this title, the Secretary shall, not later than the expiration of the 45-day period following the submission of such request, approve such request or transmit to the Congress a report explaining why such request has not been approved. Such period may be extended for an additional 15-day period if the Secretary requests additional information from the corporation. If the Secretary fails to transmit such report to the Congress within such 45-day period or 60-day period, as the case may be, the corporation may proceed as if such request had been approved."

FEDERAL HOME LOAN MORTGAGE CORPORATION GUARANTEE OF MORTGAGE-BACKED SECURITIES ISSUED BY OTHERS

SEC. 210. Section 306 of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) The Corporation may not guarantee mortgage-backed securities or mortgage related payment securities backed by mortgages not purchased by the Corporation."

PREFERRED STOCK OF FEDERAL HOME LOAN MORTGAGE CORPORATION

SEC. 211. Section 306(f) of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation Act is amended—

(1) by inserting before the period at the end of the last sentence the following: ", and shall not be entitled to vote with respect to the election of any member of the Board of Directors"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Such preferred stock, or any class thereof, may have such terms as would be required for listing of preferred stock on the New York Stock Exchange, except that this sentence does not apply to any preferred stock, or class thereof, the initial sale of which is made directly or indirectly by the corporation exclusively to any Federal Home Loan Bank or Banks."

STUDY OF PREPAYMENT PENALTIES AND THE SECONDARY MORTGAGE MARKET

SEC. 212. Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, following consultation with the Board of Directors of the Federal National Mortgage Association, the Board of Directors of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation, the President of the Government National Mortgage Association, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the National Credit Union Administration Board, shall submit to the Congress a report regarding mortgage prepayment penalties and their impact on secondary mortgage market activities. Such report shall include—

(1) a review of State laws and regulations regarding prepayment penalties;

(2) an evaluation of the impact of prepayment penalties on the ability to attract investors to the secondary mortgage market;

(3) an analysis of existing authority for lenders to offer mortgage instruments containing prepayment penalties; and

(4) a proposal for federally standardized mortgage instruments that would contain prepayment penalties in combination with features that would be attractive to prospective purchasers of homes, including below-market interest rates and prohibitions on non-risk related settlement charges normally incurred by homeowners upon refinancing.

AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT REGARDING FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION OBLIGATIONS

SEC. 213. (a) The second sentence of section 309(h) of the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act is amended by inserting "before October 1, 1985," after "corporation".

(b) The last sentence of section 311 of the Federal National Mortgage Association Charter Act is amended by inserting after "issuances" the following: "by the Association and all issuances of stock, and debt obligations convertible into stock, by the corporation".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH].

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes of my time to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 10 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I thank the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Colorado, for yielding this time.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment being offered today to title II of S. 2040, the Secondary Mortgage Market Enhancement Act, are basically changes in the charter acts of both the Federal National Mortgage Association [FNMA] and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation [FHLMC] and were previously debated and approved by the House in July 1983 as part of the housing bill known as H.R. 1. However, because of the differences in the House and Senate language these provisions were not included in the compromise housing bill that became law last November.

The major charter act change included in this amendment is a provision that would allow both FNMA and FHLMC to purchase second mortgage loans. This provision extends FNMA's current program and expands FHLMC's authority to purchase seconds other than home improvement and energy loans. This is a very important provision for many would be homeowners around the country and in HUD's recent solicitation of comments on FNMA's second mortgage program, 99 percent of the comments supported a permanent unrestricted authority to purchase second mortgages. While this provision allows for unrestricted purchase of seconds it does have a sunset of 1987 and a limit on the amount of the seconds eligible to be purchased to $57,000 for one to four family homes. Added to the original provision is a limitation that would prohibit FNMA and FHLMC from purchasing both a first mortgage and a second when combined that would exceed the limit of $114,000.

There are a number of other minor changes to the charter acts such as expanding the Board of Directors for FNMA from 15 to 18, and clarifying language dealing with the authority of FHLMC to purchase mortgage loans insured in whole or in part by State agencies. For the record I am including a section-by-section of title II of this amendment.

I urge by colleagues to once again support this legislation that will greatly enhance the critical role that both FNMA and FHLMC play in providing housing for low and moderate income families in our Nation.

The House Banking Committee Report 98-123 provides report language on a number of the Charter Act changes that are being considered today in title II of the amendment to S. 2040. However, the committee wishes to express some additional views to further clarify several of these Charter Act changes.

As in H.R. 1, this amendment provides explicit statutory authority for FNMA and FHLMC to purchase second mortgages. The maximum principal obligation of such mortgages for one- to four-family dwellings has been increased to $57,000 and the sunset date for this authority has been extended to October 1, 1987. This authority in no way lessens the view of the committee that the primary role of FNMA and FHLMC is to deal in mortgages that support and assist the sale and rehabilitation of housing.

Section 209 of this amendment has particular significance in view of the committee's concern that any requests by FNMA for approval by the HUD Secretary as required under the Charter Act be considered in a timely fashion.

Because of the rapidly changing environment in the financial services industry, it is imperative that the role of FNMA in no way be hindered in providing the credit for America's future housing needs. Thus, it is imperative that the Secretary respond to these requests without any unnecessary delays.

The intent of the Secretary's role regarding FNMA's activities was not designed to entangle the corporation in unnecessary delays, bureaucratic red-tape, or extraneous considerations. Thus, section 209 was designed to provide a balance between FNMA's need to respond to changing market conditions in a timely fashion, while providing the Secretary with the time necessary to review the requests by FNMA.

The 45-calendar-day period, plus a 15-day extension, if necessary, is ample time for the Secretary to review the request, and the committee does not expect any need for further extensions. If the Secretary does not act in this time period, then FNMA may proceed with the proposal.

Finally, if the Secretary should deny a particular request, a report must be made to Congress explaining the reasons for denial. These views are intended to supercede prior S. 2040 report language relating to this issue.

Section 207 of title II of the amendment to S. 2040 increases the Federal National Mortgage Association Board of Directors to a total of 18 members by adding three new stockholder-elected directors. These new positions may be filled for a term ending with the next annual stockholders meeting.

The need for a secondary market program for manufactured housing has been under discussion for sometime and the Banking Committee is aware of FNMA's current evaluation of a personal property manufactured home secondary market program. The committee urges FNMA to continue to work with industry groups to develop such a program and encourages the implementation of this program in a timely fashion.

And finally, while the committee has agreed to continue the authority of the HUD Secretary to approve FNMA's issuance of obligations to other instruments until September 30, 1985, it wishes to make clear that it does not expect FNMA's requests to meet with any long and unnecessary delays. The committee also does not expect this authority to be used in any way to emphasize or deemphasize certain activities where the HUD direction may not be consistent with congressional intent. And third, the committee expects HUD to keep in mind that FNMA participates in a very competitive market and to not in any way interfere with their response to market developments through the use of obligational authority.

SECTION-BY-SECTION OF TITLE II AMENDMENT TO S. 2040

Sec. 201 states that the statutory limits on first mortgages apply to the original amount of whole loans whether or not partial interest is purchased.

Sec. 202 permits FHLMC to purchase manufactured home loans secured by personal, real or mixed property as long as the homes are principal residences.

Sec. 203 allows FNMA and FHLMC to purchase second mortgages without any restrictions on the use of these mortgages. The maximum original principal obligation cannot exceed $57,000 for one- to four-family dwellings. Sunset is October 1, 1987. FNMA and FHLMC may purchase multifamily mortgages with an October 1, 1985, sunset.

Sec. 204 provides a technical clarification of the definition conventional mortgage so FHLMC could purchase loans insured by State agencies.

Sec. 205 provides that the loan-to-value ratio presently required by FNMA and FHLMC for single-family mortgages no longer applies to multifamily mortgages.

Sec. 206 increases the limitation on the maximum principal obligations of all conventional multifamily mortgages purchased by FNMA/FHLMC to 240 percent of the section 207 FHA multifamily limits in HUD designated high-cost areas.

Sec. 207 increases the FNMA Board of Directors from 15 to 18 with additional members elected by the stockholders.

Sec. 208 requires HUD Secretary to report to Congress no later than June 30 of each year on FNMA's activities.

Sec. 209 requires HUD Secretary to respond to FNMA requests for approval of actions within 45 days with a 15-day extension permitted.

Sec. 210 provides that the Corporation may not guarantee mortgage-backed securities or mortgage-related payment securities backed by mortgages not purchased by the Corporation.

Sec. 211 prescribes standards for FHLMC for issuing preferred stock.

Sec. 212 requires the Secretary to do a study on mortgage prepayment penalties and the impact on the secondary market.

Sec. 213(a) HUD Secretary's general authority to approve issuance of all FNMA obligations expires September 30, 1985.

Sec. 213(b) restricts Secretary's approval of FNMA obligations to issuances of stock and of obligations convertible into stock.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE], the distinguished ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

I thank the gentleman for yielding the 10 minutes to the Banking Committee, and I rise in support of the amendment to S. 2040, the Secondary Mortgage Market Enhancement Act.

The primary purpose of this legislation is to increase the efficiency of the housing finance system, along with assuring an adequate future supply of mortgage credit. Title II, over which the Banking Committee has jurisdiction deals with changes in the charter of the Federal National Mortgage Association and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation. These two Government-sponsored entities make up the major portion of our secondary mortgage market. The powers they receive will, to a great extent, determine the future of the secondary market.

Congress has a responsibility to promote the economic viability of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac when that can be done without jeopardizing the status of private enterprise and when it will improve the position of American homeowners. I believe we accomplish that goal in the amendment to title II of this legislation.

For example, we authorize additional powers with regard to second mortgages and also manufactured housing. Both of these subject matters have become much more active in recent years and are very much a part of the mortgage finance scene. Homeowners either utilizing a second mortgage or purchasing a manufactured house should have full access to either Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac. By providing them with this access, we will be lowering the cost of their mortgage credit.

I should point out that, in providing these increased powers to Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae, we have not lost sight of their primary purpose which is to serve the lower to middle segment of the housing market. To ensure this, we have inserted language clarifying the existing statutory limitations on mortgages purchased by either of the two corporations. The law will now clearly read that the mortgage limits apply to the whole loan whether or not only a partial interest is purchased. The intent is to put the so-called luxury market off limits and preserve this market for the rapidly growing private secondary market firms.

In addition, we have prohibited piggybacking of first and second mortgages and we have placed limits on the size of the second mortgage as well as the first mortgage. Under an amendment that enjoyed bipartisan support and was adopted in subcommittee, the second mortgage limits would be 50 percent of the first mortgage limits, or $57,000 at the present time.

For the first time, securities activities and secondary mortgage issues have been dealt with in one comprehensive piece of legislation. In the past, secondary mortgage market legislation has always been linked to various omnibus housing legislation. I believe the significance of the secondary market in today's home financing market warrants separate consideration such as the legislation before us.

I applaud the joint efforts of Chairmen ST GERMAIN and DINGELL in bringing this important legislation to the floor, and I urge my colleagues to suspend the rules and pass S. 2040 with the amendment we are considering.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by saying that it has indeed been gratifying to work with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking, Mr. ST GERMAIN, and with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ]. This legislation spans the jurisdictions of the Banking and the Commerce Committees. It reflects our shared goals of ensuring adequate financing for housing in this country while protecting investors in our capital markets.

The objective of this bill is to facilitate the growth of a private market for mortgage backed securities. The bill reflects the dramatic changes taking place in housing finance in recent years, as high and volatile interest rates have made traditional mortgage lenders—banks and thrifts—less willing to hold long-term mortgages. Increasingly, Government and Government-sponsored agencies have been called upon to support mortgage originators and have turned to the capital markets as a source of funds for housing. Private participants have entered the arena, and this bill seeks to further encourage their participation. Title I would accomplish this objective by changing certain State and Federal securities regulation requirements for securities backed by mortgages.

In the current interest rate environment, mortgage-backed securities have played a critical role in maintaining the flow of funds to housing. In 1983, $72 billion of the $190 billion of new residential mortgages created were financed through the sale of mortgage-backed securities. At the end of 1983, outstanding mortgage-backed securities issued by the Government-related agencies since the beginning of the early 1970's totaled $243 billion—about 20 percent of all outstanding mortgages—and private firms had issued a total of $10 billion.

The share of the private sector is growing. Last year, private issues accounted for $2 billion of the total. But the market for mortgage-backed securities is estimated to reach $200 billion per year by the mid-1980's to meet the demand for the $1.6 trillion of mortgage credit needed to finance housing through the end of the decade. An increase in the role of private issuers will help meet this need.

This bill was passed by the Senate on November 18, 1983 and was introduced in the House by Mr. ST GERMAIN as H.R. 4557. It was jointly referred to the Energy and Commerce Committee and the Banking Committee.

Both of our committees have considered the proposal in the context of long-standing public policy goals. The Banking Committee's jurisdiction led them to focus more on encouraging home ownership. Preserving investor protection and maintaining confidence in long-term capital markets are the goals that reflect our jurisdiction. Accordingly, the Energy and Commerce Committee considered only title I of the bill.

Title I of the bill before us is an amendment in the nature of a substitute. It reflects our concern for investor protection and a number of the recommendations of witnesses during our hearing on March 14. The amendment had bipartisan support in committee and has been discussed with the Senate committee. We understand that the Senate does not object to the changes that have been made in title I of the bill.

The substitute amendment would amend the Securities Acts by adding a definition of the term "mortgage-related security." It changes margin requirements governing the timing of purchases and payments to facilitate the trading of mortgage-related securities and provide greater liquidity. It authorizes depository institutions to invest in mortgage-related securities, preempts State law with respect to limitations on the investments in these instruments, and exempts them from registration under State securities law.

The major difference in the bill as introduced and the substitute amendment is the deletion of the section of the bill that would have exempted mortgage related securities from the registration requirements under the Securities Act of 1933. The primary objective of the 1933 act is to ensure adequate disclosure of information to investors. Over the last 50 years, the registration and disclosure requirements have proved to be the bedrock of public confidence in our securities markets. The exemption contained in the bill as introduced would not significantly increase the ability of private issuers of mortgage-backed securities to compete with federally supported agencies, but would significantly erode investor protection.

Other important changes made by our committee include the requirement that mortgage-related securities be rated in the top two—rather than four—rating categories and that they be collateralized by first liens only. In addition, States are given 7 years, instead of 3, to override the preemption of State laws. Finally the section authorizing self registration has been deleted as unnecessary.

The substitute amendment provides the mechanisms necessary to encourage expansion of the private market for mortgage backed securities. It does this without compromising requirements for disclosure, the essential ingredient in investor protection. The committee believes that disclosure will enhance investor confidence in this market and thus will contribute to the objective of enhancing the flow of funds to housing through this channel.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the very distinguished ranking minority member of the Housing Subcommittee, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. McKINNEY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. McKINNEY] is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to join with my colleagues from the Energy and Commerce Committee and the Banking Committee to urge passage of this important piece of legislation. We are all very aware of the need to stimulate the housing market. This bill represents a major development in the evolution of a market for mortgage-related securities. As that market grows, the ultimate result will be the increased availability of funds for mortgages and more stable rates for home buyers.

Title II of this bill is essentially the same as part of the housing bill, H.R. 1, passed by the House in 1983. The language in title I of this bill has been worked out by the Energy and Commerce Committee in conjunction with the Senate and House Banking Committees. This final product is a comprehensive approach to provide more mortgage liquidity with the necessary support.

I would like to conclude by giving credit to the Texans who have been the moving force in bringing this legislation to the floor. The leadership of the chairman of the respective Housing Subcommittees, Senator TOWER and Congressman GONZALEZ, and the energetic and persistent efforts of Congressman BARTLETT deserve special recognition. Also, the roles played by Chairman ST GERMAIN and ranking Republican CHALMERS WYLIE were instrumental in keeping interest in this legislation alive. Along with the leadership of the Energy and Commerce Committee we have produced a bill that the whole House can endorse.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Connecticut for his contribution.

The next gentleman who will speak is the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT]. Much of the credit for this legislation has been through his persistence and just plain, intelligent, hard work, and he is to be commended for it. I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT] is recognized for 4 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio for his kind words.

I rise today in very strong support of S. 2040, the Secondary Mortgage Market Enhancement Act. This final product is virtually without controversy, and yet this legislation, I predict, will be one of the most significant bills considered this year.

With the passage of this act, we will help to assure that the 63.5 million Americans who will be in their prime home buying years in this decade will have the opportunity to buy their first home. This legislation simply begins to remove many of those regulatory and statutory impediments that are in the secondary-mortgage market.

The secondary market is increasingly important in providing mortgage capital in this country. In 1980, only 14 percent of all mortgages were sold into the secondary market. By 1983, that amount had risen to 43 percent, and some think that by 1990 that figure will rise to 80 percent. So the issue that we address today, Mr. Speaker, is the continued availability and affordability of mortgage capital for this generation and the next generation of home buyers.

Mr. Speaker, we would not have this legislation before us today if it had not been for the distinguished leadership of the chairman of the Banking Committee, and his leadership in helping to frame this legislation. I commend the gentleman for his patience and his leadership and likewise, I commend my friend [Mr. WYLIE] from Ohio, the ranking member and the ranking member on the Housing Subcommittee [Mr. McKINNEY] and the chairman from my own State, of the Housing Subcommittee [Mr. GONZALEZ] as well as all of the members of the Energy and Commerce Committee.

Many experts predict that the cumulative demand for mortgage credit will exceed $2 trillion between now and the early 1990's. Those in the "baby-boom generation" are reaching their home-buying years, so it is to meet this growing demand for affordable housing that takes a commitment from every sector of the marketplace, and that is the nexus of this bill.

As everyone here knows, I am a strong supporter of Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae, and both of those agencies are supporting this bill. However, the demand is far greater than the existing Federal agencies can provide. So, therefore, we have to look to all sources for that mortgage capital. It is going to take Fannie Mae, and Freddie Mac, and Ginny Mae, and pension funds, and banks, and savings and loans, both the old kind and the new kind, and new private sources like Sears and GE, and institutional investors, and securities firms, and Wall Street, and indeed all of the participants that we can bring into the secondary-mortgage market.

Mr. Speaker, the main provisions of this bill, and I will run through them very quickly, include: No. 1, defining a mortgage-related security; it has never been done. No. 2, allowing for forward-base trading. No. 3, investment in private mortgage-related securities to be permitted by the depository institutions. No. 4, preempting State laws to simply permit pensions to invest in mortgage-backed securities. Many of those State laws were written when we did not have mortgage-backed securities. We would also permit Freddie Mac to purchase manufactured home loans. We would provide Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae the authority to purchase second mortgages, and we would remove the HUD obligational authority over Fannie Mae using a sunrise provision to give this Congress a chance to revisit that issue by September 30, 1985.

Mr. Speaker, not one of these changes alone is Earth shattering; it is the cumulative effect of all of these changes that will accomplish this House's goal of available mortgage capital so that homebuyers will be able to afford mortgages for their homes in the future. This legislation recognizes the importance of all participants in the secondary mortgage market and in the mortgage market to ensure that we meet that demand.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM] is recognized for 2 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCOLLUM. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in general support of this bill. The last major legislative change affecting the secondary-residential-mortgage market occurred with the enactment of the Emergency Home Finance Act in 1970.

Since 1970, extensive changes have occurred in financing residential mortgages and in bringing needed capital into the residential mortgage market. Perhaps the most significant of these changes has been the development and the financial markets' acceptance of the mortgage-backed securities. This, of course, is an instrument which attracts capital into the mortgage market from both traditional and nontraditional mortgage investors.

However, since 1970, Congress has not looked into the operations of the secondary residential mortgage market to any significant degree.

So, it seems to me that developments in mortgage financing since 1970, in and of themselves, warrant thorough examination of the functioning of the secondary market, particularly to see how the FHLMC and FNMA, which are creations of Congress, have performed. And, there is now the question of how these two entities should operate in light of the emergence of privately sponsored and owned secondary market entities, which are seeking their share to the conventional mortgage market.

The secondary market has been tremendously important to homebuyers and it is obvious that substantial sums of mortgage money will be needed to meet housing demands. Can the two federally sponsored secondary market entities with their existing statutory authority meet the challenge? What financial role, if any, will be required of the Federal Government? What about the emerging privately sponsored and owned secondary market entities? To consider these and other aspects of the basic public policy question of the role of the Federal Government in the unsubsidized mortgage market, I offered and withdrew an amendment in the full Banking Committee which would have established a congressionally appointed commission to study the secondary residential mortgage market. We need a congressionally appointed commission study to insure the fact that all possible solutions are considered before any recommendations are made. The chairman of the housing subcommittee has agreed to work with me on this matter and I look forward to pursuing the issue in the near future with him and his staff. The secondary mortgage market is going to play a major role in the future and I believe the issues should be studied by experts who then sit down with the appropriate committees of the Congress to give us their recommendations and the background for them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished ranking member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RINALDO].

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, it has been estimated that upwards of $1.6 trillion will be needed to finance the expected housing demand between now and 1990, and that at least 50 percent of this demand will have to be financed in the secondary market. To help meet this demand and ensure that affordable housing remains available to our citizens, we must tap our capital markets through the issuance of mortgage-backed securities.

In recent years, interest has developed in encouraging increased private-sector participation in this growing market. Private issuers such as Norwest, GE Credit, and others have entered the market, and during 1983 sold almost $2 billion in mortgage-backed securities.

Yet structural impediments, such as State laws prohibiting insurance companies, State and local employee pension funds, and other State investment limitations have thwarted the growth of this market. S. 2040, which the House is considering today, will preempt these State limitations and will serve to increase the funds available to finance housing by increasing the participation of the private sector in the secondary mortgage market.

The need for this increased funding has arisen from the reluctance or inability of traditional mortgage lenders to hold long-term, fixed-rate mortgages in a volatile interest rate environment.

I believe that the passage of this legislation will mean an increase in the amount of funds available for home mortgages. It will result in the flow of capital to housing markets and help make it possible for young families to fulfill their dream of owning their own home.

The Subcommittee on Telecommunications, Consumer Protection and Finance has held hearings on this matter, and a number of amendments which decrease the risks associated with these securities were adopted by our subcommittee when it was considered in June. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this legislation, which I feel is vitally needed and will be of tremendous economic benefit to the people of this Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I first wish to commend the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee and the ranking member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RINALDO] for this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of S. 2040 is to increase the flow of funds to housing by facilitating the participation of the private sector in the secondary market for mortgages. At present, federally sponsored agencies—the Federal National Mortgage Association [Fannie Mae] and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation [Freddie Mac]—pool loans originated by traditional mortgage lenders to back securities issued by the agencies which are sold in the capital markets. In 1983 alone, $72 billion of the $190 billion of new one-family to four-family home mortgages created were financed through the sale of mortgage-backed securities. Almost all of these mortgage-backed securities were issued or guaranteed by Government-related agencies.

As the demand for housing continues to rise, the sale of mortgage-backed securities to provide housing credit will become increasingly important. This demand for housing credit is rising at the same time traditional mortgage lenders, such as thrift institutions and banks, are unwilling or unable to hold long-term, fixed rate mortgages in a potentially volatile interest rate environment. Although the pooling of these loans and the sale of mortgage-backed securities by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac has increased the capital available to finance housing through the creation of a secondary market for mortgages, the existing Federal and quasi-Federal agencies will not be able to meet the anticipated demand without a significant expansion of their activities. Rather than solely rely on an expansion of the activity of these agencies, this legislation is designed to facilitate the growth of the private-sector's ability to issue mortgage-backed securities and increase the flow of funds to housing.

To enable and encourage the private sector to increase its participation in the secondary market for mortgages, S. 2040 amends existing Federal securities laws and State registration requirements, so-called blue sky laws, to remove impediments to the marketing of mortgage-backed securities by the private sector. The legislation also permits the States' to override the Federal preemption in these areas if done within 7 years after enactment of this legislation. This period is sufficient to accommodate any State that believes its investors will be better served by State legislation.

The amendments to Federal and State securities law contained in the legislation do not jeopardize the protection that these laws afford investors. Sensitivity to investor protection is reflected in the provisions of the legislation which do not exempt mortgage-backed securities from the registration requirements of the Securities Act of 1933 and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder.

In addition, mortgage-backed securities, as defined by this legislation, must be rated in the top two rating categories. Moreover, the securities cannot be backed by second liens if these securities are to qualify under the bill's provisions which liberalize margin requirements, permit investment depository institutions to purchase such securities, and allow for the preemption of State law. The protection afforded investors by the disclosure provisions and the more stringent rating requirements will enhance investor confidence in the market for these securities and thus will contribute to the objective of enhancing the flow of funds to housing through this investment vehicle.

For these reasons I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this legislation.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. McCANDLESS].

Mr. McCANDLESS. I thank the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE] for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of S. 2040. This legislation makes several important changes in the secondary mortgage market. Among those changes is a section that allows Freddie Mac to purchase loans on a manufactured home even when the home is considered personal or mixed property under State law.

This change will correct an ambiguity in the law. Under current law, Freddie Mac may purchase loans secured by manufactured homes that are considered to be real property under State law. In some States, however, manufactured homes are considered to be personal or mixed property and, thus, ineligible for coverage by Freddie Mac. This bill will achieve uniform eligibility and assure that coverage includes all manufactured homes, regardless of whether or not those homes are considered to be real property under State law. Fannie Mae already has this authority.

Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac play a very important role in the mortgage market serving lower and middle income home buyers. Manufactured housing provides a lower cost housing opportunity for those home buyers. Consequently, it is necessary to clarify the definition of property, as this bill does, so as to specifically include loans secured by manufactured homes.

Manufactured housing was pioneered in southern California and continues to provide an important source of housing for families of all income levels. Therefore, I strongly support S. 2040 and urge its passage.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WORTLEY].

Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the House amendment to S. 2040, the Secondary Mortgage Market Enhancement Act of 1984 and ask to revise and extend my remarks.

When the bill was introduced last November, I never thought I would stand in the well of the House and urge my colleagues to vote for its adoption for the bill had serious equity and Federal credit budget problems.

For instance, the original bill called for a change in the charter of the Federal National Mortgage Association so that it could provide direct and permanent financing to home buyers. This proposed policy change set off alarms for those of us who believe that Fannie Mae's traditional function as a provider of supplemental assistance to the secondary market should be preserved.

Wisely, the bill was amended to take care of the direct and permanent financing problem. Additional attempts to have Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac use their preferred presence in the credit market to subsidize affluent home buyers were not made.

The use of the secondary market as a residential housing finance mechanism has grown rapidly in recent years. Seventy-two billion dollars of the $190 billion in primary home mortgage loans was channeled through the secondary market in 1983. Their continued growth is assured.

The work done by the Energy and Commerce Committee in streamlining and updating the securities section of the bill will encourage additional private participation in the secondary housing market. The changes affected by the Banking Committee in the original bill will assure that the basic public policy aspects built into both Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac will be retained.

The bill we debate today is a prime example of how Congress can help meet the Nation's housing finance needs. I urge my colleagues to cast their votes in favor of its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

● Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, last November after the housing bill passed without the FNMA and FHLMC Charter Act changes originally incorporated into H.R. 1, I introduced H.R. 4557 which included not only those Charter Act changes but a number of changes to the securities laws that we believe would enhance the development of the secondary mortgage marketplace.

Today, I am pleased that we have under consideration an amendment to the Senate bill, S. 2040, that incorporates many of the provisions that were included in H.R. 4557, and I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

The Banking Committee over the years has been very sensitive to the Nation's mortgage credit requirements, and in this time when the demand for mortgage credit is expanding, I am pleased that we have been able to continue to respond positively to this need through the provisions in this amendment.

The changes in the FNMA and FHLMC Charter Acts, which are incorporated in title II of this amendment, will enable them to continue the very important role that they have played over the years in providing housing credit for our country's home buyers. And, the changes in the securities laws, which were considered and amended by the Energy and Commerce Committee and are part of title I of this amendment, will greatly enhance the ability of mortgage-backed securities to play a more competitive role in the capital markets.

The issues incorporated in this amendment have been under consideration by both the Banking Committee and the Energy and Commerce Committee for well over a year and have been thoroughly reviewed and debated. Thus, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment that will further enable the secondary mortgage market to meet the demands of the home-buying public. ●

Mr. TAUKE. I have no further requests for time, Mr. Speaker, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE] that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 2040, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the Senate bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the Senate bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 with respect to the treatment of mortgage backed securities, to increase the authority of the Federal National Mortgage Association and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on S. 2040, the Senate bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

IMPLEMENTATION OF U.S. OPPOSITION TO TORTURE BY FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 605) regarding the implementation of the policy of the U.S. Government in opposition to the practice of torture by any foreign government, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.J. RES. 605

Whereas international human rights organizations have investigated and reported on the use of torture in many countries throughout the world;

Whereas the Department of State in its annual country reports on human rights practices has reported that torture is all too frequent in many countries of the world;

Whereas torture knows no ideological boundaries and is practiced in countries in every region of the world;

Whereas torture is absolutely prohibited by international legal standards;

Whereas in those countries where torture is practiced systematically, it is possible to identify laws, institutions, and other forms of politically organized organization that contribute to the practice and allow its continuation;

Whereas legal, medical, religious, and other groups seeking to combat torture emphasize that access to detainees, the civil and criminal prosecution of torturers, and the rehabilitation of victims of torture are critical steps in reducing the practice and effects of torture;

Whereas the United States Government has supported the work of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in developing the draft Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment which is intended to reduce the practice of torture and lead to its eventual abolition, and the United States Government is supportive of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture; and

Whereas the good will of the peoples of the world toward the United States can be increased when the United States distances itself from the practice of torture by governments friendly to the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Congress reaffirms that it is the continuing policy of the United States Government to oppose the practice of torture by foreign governments through public and private diplomacy and, when necessary and appropriate, through the enactment and vigorous implementation of laws intended to reinforce United States policies with respect to torture. The United States Government opposes acts of torture whenever they occur, without regard to ideological or regional considerations, and will make every effort to work cooperatively with other governments and with nongovernmental organizations to combat the practice of torture worldwide.

Sec. 2. (a) The President is requested—

(1) to instruct the Permanent Representative of the United States to the United Nations to continue to raise the issue of torture practiced by governments; and

(2) to continue to involve the United States Government in the formulation of international standards and effective implementing mechanisms, particularly the draft Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

(b) In order to implement the policy expressed in the first section of this resolution, the Secretary of State is requested to issue formal instructions to each United States chief of mission regarding United States policy with respect to torture, including—

(1) instructions—

(A) to examine allegations of the practice of torture, particularly allegations concerning the existence of secret detention, extended incommunicado detention, and restrictions on access by family members, lawyers, and independent medical personnel to detainees; and

(B) to forward such information as may be gathered, including information regarding any efforts made by the host government to reduce and eliminate the practice of torture, to the Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs for analysis in preparing the Department's annual country reports on human rights practices;

(2) in the case of a chief of mission assigned to a country where torture is regularly practiced, instructions to report on a periodic basis as circumstances require to the Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs regarding efforts made by the respective United States diplomatic mission to implement United States policy with respect to combating torture;

(3) instructions to meet with indigenous human rights monitoring groups knowledgeable about the practice of torture for the purpose of gathering information about such practice; and

(4) instructions to express concern in individual cases of torture brought to the attention of a United States diplomatic mission including, whenever feasible, sending United States observers to trials when there is reason to believe that torture has been used against the accused.

(c) The Secretary of Commerce should continue to enforce vigorously the current restrictions on the export of crime control equipment pursuant to the Export Administration Act of 1979.

(d) The heads of the appropriate departments of the United States Government that furnish military and law enforcement training to foreign personnel, particularly personnel from countries where the practice of torture has been a documented concern, shall include in such training, when relevant, instruction regarding international human rights standards and the policy of the United States with respect to torture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL].

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 605, as amended, regarding the implementation of the policy of the U.S. Government in opposition to the practice of torture by any foreign government.

At the outset, I would like to commend all of the cosponsors of the resolution, which now number 189, for their support of this crucial resolution. Such broad bipartisan support is an important demonstration of U.S. seriousness and commitment to eliminating the use of torture around the globe. In particular, I wish to commend the Honorable GUS YATRON, chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations for his efforts and his subcommittee's hearings on the issue. Further, I would like to note the important contributions made by Amnesty International in promoting public awareness on the range of aspects of the torture problem.

House Joint Resolution 605 is supported by the administration. The amendment approved by the Committee on Foreign Affairs in no way affects the substance of the resolution. It is a reworking of language to accommodate the administration which supports the resolution.

Torture is an insidious practice of brutality which is the most egregious example of man's inhumanity toward man. Torture is antithetical to our respect for the rights and dignity of the individual—it is violent; it is abhorrent; and it is illegal.

The exercise of torture is not a unique nor isolated occurrence—it is pervasive throughout the world. It is utilized by governments of the left and by governments of the right; by nations which are friendly and by nations which are our adversaries. It is applied systematically and indiscriminately. Wherever it occurs, it must be eliminated.

Prevention of torture is a multilevel responsibility. No one sector can be expected to singlehandedly abolish it. Torture must be attacked through a multiplicity of channels, both public and private. International fora, regional organizations, governments, intergovernmental organizations, nongovernmental organizations and individuals must all be involved. Each has a role to perform.

Effective torture prevention must address the root of the problem. Not only is a general awareness of torture necessary, but there is a need to inculcate basic values and respect for individual rights at the grassroots level. In instances where torture is reported, pressure on offending governments or institutions must be applied to deter it. Amnesty International believes such pressure on offending governments or institutions can be highly effective in combating torture.

Eradicating torture poses a unique and challenging dilemma. Torture is never proclaimed to be a government's policy. Rather, it is shielded from public view, conducted in secrecy, and its existence denied. Therein lies the dilemma—how to combat a practice which is universally condemned, yet clandestinely practiced.

One means of addressing the problem is through the banning of secret or incommunicado detentions. Such types of detention are often a "pre-condition for torture." During initial hours of such custody a detainee is most vulnerable to torture. In addition, access to detainees by family, lawyers, and medical personnel must be granted. A further preventative measure is the proper training of security forces. Instruction in interrogation techniques as well as familiarization with human rights principles would help foster respect for the dignity and rights of the individual.

There are various international and regional instruments prohibiting torture. Some focus specifically on that brutality. Numerous others have components dealing with particular aspects of torture or condemning its use in broader terms. Furthermore, these legal instruments and codes of conduct are buttressed by national laws and activities of intergovernmental and nongovernmental organizations.

To eliminate torture will require a sustained commitment to confront, publicize, and work to abolish it. Governments must play their part by enunciating clearly their opposition to torture and their determination to assiduously combat it. Adoption of legal and procedural safeguards is essential. Ratification and adherence to relevant international instruments, and formulation of domestic laws making torture a criminal offense subject to prosecution, are important in demonstrating commitment. Subsequent measures can eliminate a milieu which permits torture to occur—banning secret detentions, permitting access to the detained by family, legal and medical personnel, training security officials, and promoting respect for individuals and their rights. All of these conditions will serve to forestall the practice of brutal violations. In the long run, however, it is necessary to internalize basic values which promote respect for individuals and their rights.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of House Joint Resolution 605.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 605, regarding the implementation of U.S. policy in opposition to torture. As a cosponsor of the resolution and as the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, I want to commend the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee [Mr. FASCELL], for bringing this measure before the House and would also like to recognize the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. YATRON], for holding 2 days of hearings on the problem of torture last May. I am pleased to note that a similar resolution has been introduced in the other body by the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and am hopeful both bodies can complete action on this measure as expeditiously as possible.

The Department of State has expressed its support for House Joint Resolution 605 and Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights, Elliott Abrams, testified before the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations last May that the United States is "profoundly and unalterably opposed to any and all forms of torture." As a policy, the U.S. Government, under Republican and Democratic administrations alike has expressed this opposition in many ways.

House Joint Resolution 605 seeks to reinforce existing U.S. policy against torture and calls on the President to instruct our Ambassador to the United Nations to continue to raise the issue of torture. It also calls on the President to continue to involve the United States in efforts to develop and implement international standards against torture particularly the draft convention on torture.

I am pleased to say that the United States has played a major role in the development of the new draft convention on torture and am hopeful for its early adoption by the United Nations.

The United States has also supported the establishment at the United Nations of a Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture and although the United States has not, to date, made a contribution to the fund, the foreign aid authorization bill (H.R. 5119) as passed by the House on May 10, 1984, proposed that a $100,000 contribution be made in the next fiscal year. Hopefully, the United States will soon be able to make a modest contribution to this worthwhile effort to help victims of torture in a very practical way.

The resolution also requests the Secretary of State to issue certain instructions to our Embassies around the world to investigate allegations of torture, to report on actions taken by foreign governments to deal with the problem, to report also on United States Embassy efforts to oppose torture in such countries, to meet with local human rights groups, to send observers to trials and to directly raise individual torture cases with foreign government officials. Many of these steps are already being taken in one form or another but can be done with greater rigor and emphasis.

Finally, the resolution also calls for the continued enforcement of U.S. law limiting exports of crime control equipment to countries engaged in human rights abuses and for the incorporation into military and law enforcement training programs instruction on international human rights standards and U.S. policy on torture.

Hopefully, House Joint Resolution 605 will be but the first of a series of steps which Congress will take to deal with the problems of torture. Congress has an obligation to take a careful look in the near future at U.S. policy regarding the admission into the United States of those who have been found to have engaged in torture. We also have an obligation to look at proposals to clarify the right of torture victims to sue their torturers in U.S. court if those torturers are either visiting or now living in the United States. A third area which needs to be examined is the subject of training of military and law enforcement personnel and the feasibility and effectiveness of discouraging the use of torture through training programs or other incentives. The United Nations has already developed a Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and has a number of regional institutes for research and training in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice.

Finally, I want to join in the commendations of Amnesty International for its tireless humane efforts on behalf of torture victims worldwide. These private citizens who have acted with an imprimatur of conscience, rather than government, warrant the gratitude of all who are concerned with the rights of individuals to life and liberty.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to give this resolution their unanimous support. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON].

Mr. YATRON. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend both the chairman, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH] for the leadership roles that they have played in bringing this issue of torture to the forefront.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support House Joint Resolution 605, legislation regarding U.S. policy in opposition to the practice of torture by any foreign government.

Millions of individuals throughout the world experience acts of cruelty too brutal to imagine. They are victimized by their governments, the very institution which should protect them. In addition to the inhumanities these people have to endure, they must endure yet another obstacle—the unwillingness on the part of well-meaning people outside of their government to look at or listen to their story. Seeing proof of torture is too difficult for many to face, but face it we must.

The Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, which I chair, held a series of hearings on the phenomenon of torture. Thanks to the efforts of Amnesty International and various other human rights organizations, we were able to look closely at this heinous crime, to see how it affects human life, and to plan specific actions to combat this cruelty.

Torture is a brutal and powerful enemy. We can combat and ultimately defeat this horrifying practice by supporting positive measures such as House Joint Resolution 605. Our fight to eradicate this universal tragedy, torture, must be a continual and determined one. We in the United States have been spared the endless agony torture victims throughout the world are realizing, but we have not been spared the responsibility of fighting against this injustice.

I would like to commend Mr. FASCELL, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, for introducing this very worthwhile legislation.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, let me just say in response to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON], if I may, that I would like to commend the gentleman and his subcommittee for their continued interest, dedication and perseverance they have shown on all of these human rights subjects. It is so easy to either be frustrated or just to say that they are motherhood issues and we should not even be bothered with them. The truth of the matter is that, as with torture, violation of human rights are pernicious and our best defense is to expose them. We must make it possible for these issues to be discussed openly and try to shame people into changing their actions. There is no such thing as official torture; it is always done very clandestinely. It takes the kind of action that the subcommittee has taken with respect to hearings, and that this Congress will take in passing the resolution, to call attention to problems that most people do not think really exist.

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues in support of House Joint Resolution 605, which reaffirms that it is the continuing policy of the U.S. Government to oppose the practice of torture by foreign governments through public and private diplomacy. I would like to commend the distinguished Chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, on which I sit, for introducing this important resolution and for bringing it to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, article 1 of the Declaration Against Torture, adopted unanimously by the United Nations on December 9, 1975, defines torture as:

Any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted by or at the instigation of a public official on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or confession, punishing him for an act he has committed, or intimidating him or other persons.

The definition also says that torture constitutes an aggravated and deliberate form of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Torture can take almost any form. In fact, it is limited only by the imagination, and people all over the world have been subjected to mental and physical cruelty of such proportions that it nearly defies comprehension by humane and civilized people.

Amnesty International, a highly respected organization with which we are all familiar, issued a report in April titled "Torture in the Eighties." This report contains everything you need to know about the practice of torture in the world. Torture, this report tells us, is usually part of the state-controlled machinery that suppresses dissent. It is practiced in more than 60 countries in the world—more than a third of the world's governments. Torture knows no ideological bounds, and victims of torture include virtually all social classes, age groups, trades and professions. Reasons differ for why people are tortured, but there is no question that whatever the reason, or the method, torture is a vicious, heinous practice, and one which must be condemned and condemned in the strongest terms.

There appears to be an increasing awareness of the practice of torture. The United Nations and other inter-governmental organizations and several nongovernmental organizations have worked to develop international standards against torture and machinery to combat its use. A growing number of domestic human rights groups are working in their own countries to document and publicize torture used by their governments. The news media carry many more news items about torture and other human rights abuses than they did a decade ago.

With the passage of House Joint Resolution 605 the Congress itself will go on record as taking a strong stand against the practice of torture and in support of enactment and vigorous implementation of laws intended to reinforce U.S. policies with respect to torture. With the passage of the resolution before us the U.S. Government clearly declares that it opposes acts of torture wherever they occur, without regard to ideological or regional considerations, and that we will make every effort to work cooperatively with other governments and with nongovernmental organizations to combat the practice of torture worldwide.

It is important that a country like the United States, with our long history of respect for human rights and the freedom of our own citizens and of citizens everywhere—support the policy declared in this resolution. I strongly support its passage and I urge my colleagues to do so as well.

Thank you.●

● Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 605, which expresses the Congress' concern with the widespread use of torture by governments around the world.

Specifically, this resolution calls for a coordinated effort with other governments and nongovernmental organizations, including the United Nations, to eliminate torture.

Additionally, the resolution would reinforce the Department of State's efforts to monitor and report on allegations of torture and to work with indigenous human rights organizations.

Finally, the resolution urges continued enforcement of restrictions on the export of crime control equipment and requires instructions in human rights principles and U.S. antitorture policy for foreign authorities receiving military or law enforcement training under U.S. auspices.

Mr. Speaker, the need for this legislation is well documented in the Amnesty International publication Torture in the Eighties. I urge my colleagues to support House Joint Resolution 605.●

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to urge my colleagues to join me in supporting House Joint Resolution 605. This resolution calls on the United States to base its foreign policy on an unyielding opposition to the use of torture throughout the world. The resolution also directs U.S. ambassadors to monitor and investigate allegations of torture in the countries in which they are representing our country.

Some of my colleagues might argue that America's commitment to the abolition of torture is clear. After all, our country subscribes to article 5 of the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that "no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment." However, it is not enough for America, with her unyielding commitment to human rights and democratic freedoms, to proclaim her opposition to torture and then do nothing to halt the spread of this unjustifiable crime against humanity.

Treaty phrases ring hollow when they stand next to the testimony of torture victims from around the world. Few are aware of the extent to which torture is practiced. According to reports gathered by Amnesty International, the international human rights organization:

In India, people have had their eyes speared by bicycle spokes and then soaked with acid pads;

In El Salvador, torture victims have reported that they were sexually abused, burned with chemicals and subjected to mock executions by paramilitary organizations and the national militia;

In Afghanistan, since the Soviet Union invaded in 1979, detainees have been deprived of food and sleep for weeks, and beaten and subjected to severe electric shock treatment;

In Turkey, one woman among many told of being tied to ceiling pipes and being left hanging in a crucifixion position. She told a representative of Amnesty International, that "the pain became so bad that my screams drowned (the torturers') voices. It was as if my arms were coming off." She was also subjected to falaka, in which her torturers beat the soles of her feet, and to electric shock torture.

Torturers do not rely on brute force alone to cow their victims into submission. Torture has taken a more subtle and sophisticated form in countries that do not want the world to know of their immoral methods of population control. In the Soviet Union, for example, political dissidents are forcibly committed to psychiatric wards where doctors inject them with hallucinatory and debilitating drugs until their will to express their deepest beliefs, and sometimes their will to live, is snuffed out.

The testimony of torture victims is seemingly endless, and the countries it streams from are many in number. In Amnesty International's recently released report, Torture in the 80's, the organization has documented that over one-third of the world's countries engage in the systematic use of torture.

Despite this bleak assessment, human rights groups know that torture is not an irreversible practice. Time after time, the world has seen that international pressure combined with internal opposition to a government's use of torture against its own people has ousted those governments which predicate their rule of a country on brutal coercion. All one has to do to see this truth is look at Argentina's rejection and prosecution of military government leaders responsible for the deaths and disappearances of thousands of innocent Argentine citizens. Amnesty International has learned of the success of this strategy on a smaller scale, through working on behalf of individual torture victims. Consider the moving testimony the prominent South Korean dissident, Lee Shin-Bom, recently gave to Amnesty. After repeated beatings and deprivation of sleep for long periods of time, Mr. Shin-Bom was called in to see the head of the torture camp. Wielding a thick stack of hundreds of letters from Amnesty and other human rights workers (and feeling the pressure of international awareness of South Korea's use of torture), the chief informed Mr. Shin-Bom that he was being removed from his torture regimen.

The United States can lend its considerable political and moral influence to the international campaign to abolish torture. Although the United States does combat torture by publishing reports on human rights in countries around the world and engaging in diplomacy to free political detainees who might be tortured, it is essential that the United States move beyond this limited role. The United States must renew its role as an outspoken and forceful opponent of government-sponsored torture, wherever it may occur. House Joint Resolution 605 begins this renewal by raising the official level of American concern about torture to the top of each American embassy; the detention and torture orders made by foreign government and military officials will no longer be scrutinized by political officers in U.S. embassies, but by the ambassadors themselves. The resolution also provides the first step toward enacting further legislation which will limit the ability of the United States to aid governments and individuals that torture—for example, legislation might be passed which prevents any acknowledged torturer from residing in the United States.

I urge my colleagues to join the House Foreign Affairs Committee in unanimously supporting this important resolution and accelerating the international movement, spearheaded by Amnesty International, to end the use of torture.●

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support this joint resolution regarding the implementation of the policy of the U.S. Government in opposition to the practice of torture. As we approach the end of the 20th century and boast of man's accomplishments in science, medicine and space flight, we fail to realize that man's inhumanity to man is a barrier we have not yet broken. In certain countries in the world, primitive and barbaric torture is a common practice. Let us face the facts. Gross violations of human rights are occurring at this very moment. While the existence of physical and emotional cruelty is rarely acknowledged by governments, it continues to inflict almost unimaginable suffering on victims of every age, religion, ethnicity, and sex.

The U.S. Government has always taken a strong stand against the practice of torture. Our Government has eagerly supported the U.N.'s Commission on Human Rights in developing a Convention Against Torture as well as the U.N.'s Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture. It is fitting that the Congress reaffirms the continuing policy of our Government to oppose the practice of torture by foreign governments. Our Government can work through public and private diplomacy and can enact laws intended to reinforce U.S. policies with respect to torture.

Under this proposed legislation, the President is requested to instruct the permanent representative of the United States to the United Nations to continue to raise the issue of torture and to continue to involve the U.S. Government in the formulation of international standards and effective implementing mechanisms. In addition, the Secretary of State is requested to issue formal instructions to our chiefs of mission around the world of our Government's policy regarding torture.

I am confident that my colleagues will join me in saying that favorable consideration of House Joint Resolution 605 will show the American people and the world that we are committed to eliminating from the face of the earth this terrible scourge. As a cosponsor of this measure, I urge my colleagues to adopt this important piece of legislation.●

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, today we will consider House Joint Resolution 605, a bill expressing the opposition of Congress to the use of torture in foreign countries. I feel strongly that everyone should be tried under a fair and just legal system: such a legal system has no room for torture.

Progress has been made in several regions throughout the world to reduce governmental, political and societal torture, but we have a long road to travel. Amnesty International, a group whose extensive work for human rights is well respected, has launched a worldwide campaign to reduce the incidences of torture. According to their 1984 report, 90 countries still allow or ignore various forms of torture within their judicial systems. These practices range from the cruel to the bizarre; from systematic torture during interrogation to abusive treatment of convicted prisoners; from limited occurrences to rampant abuse.

To Americans living in a society where physical abuse is strongly rejected, it is difficult to conceptualize torture as a common occurrence in other societies. Yet torture is still very much a reality.

This legislation, House Joint Resolution 605, would reaffirm U.S. commitment to the reduction of torture. It will send a message throughout the world that we will not allow physical abuse to go unnoticed. Aside from expressing the concern of Congress, the resolution would also request the President to instruct the U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations to continue to raise the issue of torture practiced by other governments, request the State Department to issue formal instructions to every U.S. mission overseas, require the mission to examine allegations of torture and illegal imprisonment and to express official United States concern about any use of torture. The resolution also calls on the Commerce Department to vigorously enforce current restrictions on the export of crime control equipment.

Some feel that since these abuses occur far from our soil, the United States can do little to stop these activities. However, I choose to differ. By ignoring these practices, we are silently condoning torture and other unjust activities. By expressing official opposition to the use of torture, we are notifying these governments that these practices bring disapproval from the international community. In addition, our reprimands teach citizens of these countries that torture is not a universally accepted practice, nor does it have to be tolerated. It is only through pressure from the international community that improvements will be realized.

Mr. Speaker, the elimination of torture is the goal of many. Several constituents of mine urged me to cosponsor this legislation, and I have. Churches and international organizations, such as Amnesty International, are working to help those who have been the subject of abuse and unjust treatment. It is imperative that the U.S. Government reflect this concern to our international neighbors.

I commend those who have supported House Joint Resolution 605. I would like to urge the administration to carefully consider the proposed policies.●

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 605, which reaffirms U.S. policy in opposition to the practice of torture by any foreign government.

Torture—in whatever form and wherever practiced—can never be tolerated if a humane world order is to be achieved and maintained. The sad reality is, however, that the practice of torture is both widespread and persistent throughout the world. It has been reported by the State Department and Amnesty International that torture is practiced in nearly 100 countries and occurs habitually in over 60, although secrecy and censorship make a complete accounting impossible.

Eradicating this inhumane menace poses a formidable challenge, but we must not be deterred, either by its dimensions or by the considerable commitment required to prosecute its elimination. The United States has been active in this regard, supporting the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in developing the draft: "Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman, or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture." The restrictions on the export of crime control equipment pursuant to the Export Administration Act is another important example of past involvement.

House Joint Resolution 605 complements these past undertakings and suggests a framework within which our efforts may be expanded. In that vein, House Joint Resolution 605 is more than a symbolic statement about the evils of torture; it is also a practical statement on the options we should pursue in implementing our policy in opposition to these methods.

In this age of mass communication, we have all seen and heard too vividly, too often, countless examples of man's inhumanity to man. House Joint Resolution 605 addresses one of the most blatant and tragic violations of internationally accepted principles of human rights—prohibitions on the practice of torture—and I hope my colleagues will join me in lending their support to this measure.●

● Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 605, regarding the implementation of the policy of the United States in opposition to the practice of torture by any foreign government. It is my understanding that the other body is proceeding expeditiously in considering an identical resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 320, in the Senate.

As a cosponsor of this important legislation, I am pleased that we have an opportunity to consider legislation that reflects a strong commitment to reinforce our policy with respect to human rights—because the very meaning of our Nation is human rights. House Joint Resolution 605 is an initial step toward addressing the problem. The resolution delineates specific guidelines to help shape our policy toward combating the practice of torture around the world.

I would like to commend the full committee chairman, Mr. FASCELL, the subcommittee chairman, Mr. YATRON, and the other Members who have worked so diligently in bringing House Joint Resolution 605 to the floor. This bill contains many worthy policy initiatives.

It is equally important that we recognize the fine contribution that Amnesty International has made in publicizing cases of human rights abuse. Perhaps no other nongovernmental human rights organization has been so effective in increasing public awareness of this issue than Amnesty International.

According to their recent report, "Torture in the Eighties," prisoners have been tortured or cruelly treated in at least one out of every three countries within the past 4 years. The numerous recommendations contained in this publication and their other documents on human rights practices have shown to be invaluable and of great assistance to the application of this administration's human rights policy.

Mr. Speaker, human rights is certainly an important part of foreign policy, since the present struggle for the world is about liberty, and indeed the survival of liberty for the foreseeable future of our civilization. It should not be forgotten that the United States fought its bloodiest war not for territory, but to free the slaves. In fact when the United States recommitted itself to active involvement with the outside world—whether in wars for the liberty of Europe or in the Marshall plan—it has done so because it felt called to the defense of human rights.

As Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick wrote in 1981:

If the United States is "the most destructive power in the world," if we are "capable of genocide," if we are a "graceless land," then the defense of our national interest could not be integrally linked to the defense of human rights or any other morally worthy cause."

The United States of course, does not fit any of those awful descriptions. And we should make this abundantly clear in word and deed. House Joint Resolution 605 makes a real contribution in that effort.●

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in expressing my strong support for House Joint Resolution 605. This resolution, of which I am an original cosponsor, sets forth specific recommendations for actions to combat torture.

The resolution outlines three general areas of policy for the U.S. Government to undertake to combat torture in foreign countries. The first of these focuses on the United Nations. The President is requested to instruct the U.S. Representative to the United Nations to raise the issue of torture and to cooperate with efforts to formulate international standards and effective implementing mechanisms, including the draft "Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment."

The second policy involves the Secretary of State, and requests the Secretary to instruct all Ambassadors to examine allegations of torture, to forward this information to the Assistant Secretary for Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs, and to meet with indigenous human rights groups knowledgeable about the torture and express U.S. concern over the use of torture whenever feasible.

The last of these policy areas is the broadest, and calls upon the heads of all departments of the U.S. Government which supply military and law enforcement training abroad to include instruction regarding international human rights standards and the policy of the United States with respect to torture.

The combination of these three policy areas in House Joint Resolution 605 represent a major step toward establishing a U.S. position against torture, and for implementing a policy combating this problem.

I would like to take this opportunity to commend the activities of Amnesty International in calling attention worldwide to the problem of torture. As my colleagues may be aware, last spring AI launched a 2-year campaign to combat torture. Earlier this year the Congressional Human Rights Caucus—which I chair with my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. LANTOS] sponsored a briefing for Members and their staffs on AI's campaign against torture, and on possible actions for Members to undertake. Through their research, AI has attempted to learn what types of institutions exist within governments that allow for torture to take place, and what corrective measures need to be undertaken to eradicate the use of torture. The findings of that research, along with documentation of the use of torture around the world is the subject of a book recently published by AI, "Torture in the 80's."

The research by AI, and other human rights organizations, clearly documents an alarming degree of torture being practiced around the world. In fact, studies show that 1 out of 3 countries has practiced torture in the past 3 years, yet many of these countries are signatories to international agreements outlawing the use of torture, including the Geneva Conventions, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

During recent hearings by the House Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations and by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, victims of torture presented their own tragic tales. The details included in their testimony and that of other torture victims are gruesome and at times emotionally difficult to listen to. Unfortunately, it is all too easy for us in the United States to ignore the problem of torture since it does not exist here in our country. But it is important that we not ignore this problem, and that we turn our efforts abroad and call upon other governments to cease torture activity.

In the past the U.S. Congress has already shown compassion toward the problem of torture by supporting the United Nations Voluntary Fund for the Victims of Torture which provides worldwide humanitarian assistance for victims and their families. I support our commitment to the plight of the victims of torture through this contribution, and hope that in the future we will continue to contribute to this fund.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to lend their support to the fight against torture. It is not an easy battle, yet this resolution, House Joint Resolution 605, provides a great opportunity for the U.S. Government to work with other governments in calling for a halt to this practice. I hope my colleagues will join together in unanimously supporting this resolution.●

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time on this side.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BENNETT). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] that the House suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 605, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the joint resolution, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the joint resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

CONCERN REGARDING FLIGHT OF ETHIOPIAN JEWS

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 107) expressing the grave concern of the Congress regarding the plight of Ethiopian Jews as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 107

Whereas the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights guarantees to all persons the right to freedom of religion, the right to hold opinions without interference, the right to freedom from expulsion, and the right to emigrate;

Whereas Ethiopian Jews are among the oldest continuous Jewish communities in existence, their history extending back for three thousand years;

Whereas this community once numbered several hundred thousand persons, but the scourge of wars, pestilence, persecution, and famine over the years has reduced it to some twenty-five thousand people, several thousand of whom have sought refuge in nearby countries;

Whereas the American people are becoming increasingly aware of the difficulties facing Ethiopian Jews and are seeking ways to assist them as well as all other Ethiopians who suffer difficult conditions, including religious persecution; and

Whereas the plight of Ethiopian Jews demands that the American people and all people of good will do everything possible to alleviate their suffering: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the President should—

(1) use all appropriate channels to maintain our dialog with the Ethiopian Government on the issue of the welfare and rights of Ethiopian Jews, as well as of other Ethiopians, including those of other religious faiths;

(2) express to relevant foreign governments the United States concern for the welfare of Ethiopian Jews, in particular their right to emigrate;

(3) seek ways to assist Ethiopian Jews through every available means so that they may be able to emigrate freely, and

(4) express the concern of the American people for the welfare of the Ethiopian Jewish community in every appropriate forum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON].

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, on May 8, the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations unanimously approved House Concurrent Resolution 107 which expresses the grave concern of the Congress regarding the plight of the Ethiopian Jews. On September 7, the Foreign Affairs Committee unanimously approved the resolution with an amendment sponsored by my good friend from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] which enhances the resolution. The amendment calls on the President to use all appropriate channels to maintain our dialog with the Ethiopian Government on the issue of the welfare and rights of Ethiopian Jews, as well as of other Ethiopians, including those of other religious faiths. Sponsored by my good friend and colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ], House Concurrent Resolution 107 engenders bipartisan support and is cosponsored by 158 Members.

In 1982 the subcommittee, under the chairmanship of Congressman BONKER, conducted a series of extensive hearings on religious persecution as a violation of human rights. Of the great many injustices and degradations experienced by religious and ethnic groups at the hands of ruthless regimes, the cruel treatment of the Falashas by the Marxist government of Ethiopia is clearly one of the most serious cases of persecution and religious intolerance in the world today.

Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a sad commentary about modern civilization that there are governments today which espouse doctrines based on religious indifference. The Marxist regime in Ethiopia, through a policy of forced assimilation, is actively seeking to destroy the faith, customs and traditions of the Falashas. However, at great risk to their personal safety, the 25,000 remaining Jews in Ethiopia continue to proudly observe their spiritual beliefs.

House Concurrent Resolution 107 directs the President to promote greater international awareness of the plight of the Ethiopian Jews and specifically calls for ways to assist these people in their ongoing efforts to emigrate freely. The resolution is not opposed by the administration. I commend the sponsor of the resolution and the sponsor of the amendment for their leadership on this issue and I urge my colleagues to unanimously approve both measures.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolution 107, regarding the plight of Ethiopian Jewry. As a cosponsor and supporter of this legislation, I want to commend the author, Mr. SOLARZ, for bringing this human rights issue before the House and also to commend my colleagues Mr. YATRON and Mr. SOLOMON, for their efforts to strengthen the text of the resolution.

Just recently, the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations held a hearing on human rights in several African countries including Ethiopia. Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs Elliott Abrams testified that the human rights situation in Ethiopia is bleak and that the Jewish community in that country is subject to human rights violations including arbitrary arrest and imprisonment. According to the 1983 State Department human rights report for Ethiopia, other religious groups in Ethiopia have also been subjected to substantial official harassment. Accordingly, by this resolution the Foreign Affairs Committee seeks to make clear the concern of the Congress for the harassment within Ethiopia of all minority groups and religions. No individual is truly free unless all individuals are accorded equality before the law.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to give this resolution their unanimous support.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] for his comments.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

First, let me also commend both the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Iowa for the work that their Subcommittee on Human Rights has done in this area and in working in conjunction with our Subcommittee on the African Continent.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in wholehearted support of this resolution and urge its adoption.

In August of last year, members of the Subcommittee on Africa visited the Falasha village of Ambober in the Gondar Province of northern Ethiopia. It was a very moving experience to see the deep faith exhibited by these suffering people, a faith that no ideology or tragedy has been able to undermine. In fact, the various calamities that have befallen Jewish people in Ethiopia and throughout the world have served only to strengthen their faith and commitment.

It is particularly appropriate for this resolution to be considered today. Yesterday, the ruling military regime in Ethiopia announced the establishment of a Communist party as the sole vehicle for political activity within that country. If history teaches us anything, it is that Communists will not tolerate any source of inspiration and instruction among the people that does not conform to the brutal dogmas of Marx and Lenin.

Mr. Speaker, the particular focus of this resolution is with the Falasha people. But during the deliberations on this resolution at the subcommittee and full committee levels, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ], agreed to some changes in the wording which would make mention of the broader problem of religious persecution within Ethiopia and I thank the gentleman for his interest and cooperation.

Since the revolution in Ethiopia in 1974, all property owned by Christian churches, including hospitals and schools, has been confiscated by the regime. The patriarch of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church and many other prominent clerics were arbitrarily imprisoned after the revolution. The fate of many of these people, including the patriarch, remains unknown, 10 years after the revolution.

Aside from the officially sanctioned persecution in Ethiopia, the regime has established numerous neighborhood associations called "kebeles." These groups, comprised of the regime's political cadres, have spread an atmosphere of suspicion and terror among the people. There are many reports of local cadres confiscating and destroying Bibles and other religious articles. Families have even been assaulted while on their way to church, with the children being hauled off to attend political indoctrination classes.

Mr. Speaker, a monumental human tragedy has unfolded in Ethiopia these last 10 years. But just as the Communists in Poland have been unable to quench the faith of the people, so the Communists in Ethiopia will ultimately fail. I hope this resolution today will advance the cause of all those who seek release from spiritual oppression in Ethiopia.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BONKER].

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Concurrent Resolution 107, which expresses the grave concern of the Congress regarding the plight of the Ethiopian Jews. I would like to commend the sponsor of the resolution, Mr. SOLARZ, and the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. YATRON, for seeking expeditious action on this measure, of which I am a cosponsor.

In 1982, the Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, which I had the honor to chair, conducted an extensive series of hearings on the problem of religious persecution as a violation of human rights. During those hearings, the subcommittee had the opportunity to learn about the suffering of the Falasha community in Ethiopia. The Falashas, which means "stranger" or "alien" in the Ethiopian language, have steadfastly clung to their faith for almost 3,000 years. Since the 1974 revolution in that country, however, the Ethiopian Jews have been subject to increasingly severe repression. The Government's policy of "Ethiopia First" has spurred attempts of forceful assimilation of the Falasha community, and allowed the local authorities in the Gondar region inhabited by the Falashas to pursue discriminatory policies against the Jewish population there.

The 1983 State Department Country Reports on Human Rights observes: "it is not possible to speak with assurance about the condition of the Ethiopian Jews because access to them is so restricted and carefully monitored by the authorities. . . . Friction between the Ethiopian Jewish community and the authorities continues owing to government efforts to prevent their emigration to Israel, the lack of Hebrew instruction and the evident resistance of the Ethiopian Jews to Marxist-Leninist indoctrination."

Mr. Speaker, the Falasha community has demonstrated a courageous will to maintain its faith and tradition. House Concurrent Resolution 107 provides us the opportunity to reaffirm our commitment to ending their persecution because of their religious beliefs. I urge my colleagues to support this important resolution.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me. I want to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of our Human Rights Subcommittee, and the gentleman from Iowa, our ranking member, for helping to bring this measure to the floor at this highly appropriate time, at a time when the Falasha Jews were having an extremely difficult time in emigrating from that part of the world.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the pending resolution. House Concurrent Resolution 107 expresses in the strongest possible terms, the great concern of this Congress for the well-being of Ethiopian Jewry. Although efforts on their behalf continue every day, it is important that our official position on this important human rights matter be relayed to the White House, and all relevant foreign governments.

In the past, Ethiopian Jewry comprised one of the largest Jewish communities in the world; at its height, their numbers were estimated to be over 1 million, and these men and women enjoyed political and economic independence and had their own kings and queens. However, with Muslim forces working against them, their numbers quickly dropped to only 250,000 by the end of the 18th century. By the time Emperor Haile Selassie took the throne, only 50,000 remained, and during his 44-year reign, their situation continued to deteriorate. In the years that have followed, their numbers have been even further decimated. Compounding this serious situation is the famine that plagues the entire region, and which threatens the lives of all Ethiopians.

Unfortunately, however, the Falashas have been singled out for harsh treatment. Individuals were imprisoned and tortured in recent years, charged with being Zionists or CIA agents, and contact with the Falashas in their own villages was extremely limited.

Because of the dangers being faced by the Ethiopian Jewish community, and because their unique culture is in danger of being eradicated forever, it is important that our efforts on their behalf be increased. As an early cosponsor of House Concurrent Resolution 107, I recognized the need to expand the avenues currently being used to alleviate their plight. House Concurrent Resolution 107 asks the President to do all in his power to express to appropriate foreign governments the severity of the dangers being faced by the Falashas, and the need to assist Ethiopian Jews through every available means to secure the right to emigrate freely. This last point is especially important, as the Ethiopian Government made emigration to Israel a treasonable offense in 1981. By adoption of the pending resolution, the House of Representatives can express its official concern of this serious situation, and I urge my colleagues to join us in this important human rights effort.

● Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, now is the time for the American Congress to go on record expressing our concern about the plight of Ethiopian Jews. I strongly support the resolution before us calling the attention of the world to the unfortunate conditions of the Falashas of Ethiopia.

The Falasha, the Jews of Ethiopia, have maintained their Jewish faith and traditions against incredible odds. As one of the oldest, continuous Jewish communities in existence, they have persevered in that faith despite centuries of wars and oppression by various Ethiopian rulers. They have also been faced with pressures of absorption into the dominant culture. The Falasha, however, have always wanted to return to their homeland—Israel.

The once large group has shrunk to only 25,000. Today, this small group faces drought, disease, and increased instability in their section of Ethiopia.

Under the dictatorial rule of Lieutenant Colonel Mengistu, the Falasha can own land and enjoy the same precarious rights as other citizens. Ethiopia, however, remains a nation under a repressive government which has recently declared the Communist Party as the official party of the state. There is no freedom of speech or press. There is no freedom of assembly and association. Religious denominations have been restricted since the revolution. Some synagogues in Falasha villages have been closed. Visits to Jewish villages are infrequent and controlled.

Today, there is no freedom of emigration in Ethiopia. Anyone attempting to flee the country faces criminal charges with no guarantee of a public trial with counsel.

During the past 10 years, 1 million Ethiopian refugees fled from Ethiopia. Among their ranks were a few thousand Falasha. They were determined to take risks to win the right to practice their religion. Since 1981, however, emigration to Israel has become a treasonable offense.

This resolution recognizes the basic right of the Jews of Ethiopia to their full civil and human rights to include the right to practice their religion and to freely emigrate. Other Ethiopian groups are also suffering under the current regime, and also need our help.

Today is the opportunity for all of us to stand up and offer our support for this important resolution. I call upon my colleagues to join me in this effort.●

● Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues in support of House Concurrent Resolution 107, on behalf of Ethiopian Jews. House Concurrent Resolution 107 instructs the President to express the grave concern of Congress and the American people for the welfare and rights of the Falashas, to maintain dialog with the Ethiopian Government, and to assist the Falashas' free emigration.

Ethiopian Jews are members of one of the oldest and most devout religious communities. Yet the majority of Ethiopians, unfamiliar with the practice of Judaism, regard the Falashas as an alien people, as their name, meaning "stranger" implies.

In 1982, the Foreign Affairs Committee Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations held hearings on religious persecution as a violation of human rights. With one witness after another, those hearings documented the pattern and extent of discrimination against Ethiopian Jews. Severe economic and social discrimination has reduced the population of Falashas from 250,000 in the 19th century to less than 30,000 today.

I am aware that our diplomatic contact with Ethiopia is limited. Simcha Jacobovici, writing in the New York Times on April 23, 1983, suggested that the Ethiopian Government would be influenced by Western public opinion. American influence is urgently needed to ease repressive conditions and press for substantial reforms. I urge my colleagues to support House Concurrent Resolution 107 so that this important opportunity to communicate our concern will not be lost.●

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this resolution which expresses congressional concern over the welfare of Ethiopian Jews and calls on the relevant foreign governments to allow Ethiopian Jews to emigrate freely. As a cosponsor of this resolution I urge all of my colleagues to support this measure as a display of our continued support for and solidarity with both the Falasha community in Israel and those Jews still in Ethiopia.

The Jewish community of Ethiopia is one that has survived for over 2,000 years. It has persevered despite centuries of numerous conflicts, tribal wars, persecution and oppression; and it continues to survive in a land of stark poverty and rampant disease. The Jews of Ethiopia continue to live in a country wrought with internal strife and political insurrections. It is a country that has been devastated by a 2-year drought.

The Ethiopian Jews are a hardy community—one dedicated to preserving its religious traditions and way of life. Despite the fact that some 7,000 have already found greater religious freedom in Israel, a small Jewish community remains in Ethiopia, unable to join their loved ones in Israel and unable to realize their dream of freedom and greater religious liberty. As one who recognizes the courage and perseverance of these people—both those who have already made the trek to the promised land, Israel, and those who remain in Ethiopia—I am proud to be a cosponsor of this resolution.

The Jewish community of Ethiopia is one that yearns to emigrate to Israel to join their loved ones and live a life of freedom and religious liberty. The dreams and aspirations of this brave community must not be forgotten and I feel honored to express my solidarity with these devout and courageous people.●

● Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the House is considering House Concurrent Resolution 107; this is an urgently needed expression of the sense of Congress regarding the Ethiopian Jewish community. I and many of my colleagues have long been concerned for the preservation of this ancient community. There are now 7,000 Ethiopian Jews resettled in Israel, 10,000 to 14,000 languishing in refugee camps in adjacent countries, and 7,000 to 8,000 still in Ethiopia.

It is thought that those remaining in Ethiopia are primarily the young, the old, and the sick. These are individuals who cannot survive without the support of their community. In addition, the Gondar region, in which most of the Ethiopian Jews reside, has for a long time suffered under a devastating drought. In addition, it is the tenth anniversary of the revolution in Ethiopia, and security has been tightened; there is apparently heightened guerrilla activity in the region. All of these conditions serve to exacerbate the pre-existing antipathy which the rest of the Ethiopian population holds for their Jewish compatriots. Though the Jewish community in Ethiopia goes back for many centuries, they are referred to by some as Falashas, which means strangers.

It was at one point hoped that much of the pressure on the Ethiopian Jewish refugee population could be alleviated over the past summer. I am very sorry that this has not proved to be the case. Therefore, it is incumbent upon this body to pass House Concurrent Resolution 107. It should be clear U.S. policy to do everything we can to aid this community, and enable them to emigrate freely and settle in Israel. I urge my colleagues to support this needed measure.●

● Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 107, a measure expressing concern for the plight of the Ethiopian Jewish community. These beleaguered people have clung tenaciously to their faith despite the most adverse conditions, both in Ethiopia and in the neighboring countries where they eke out an existence in squalid refugee camps. The community, which once numbered 250,000 at its peak has been reduced to less than 25,000 today, and the grim conditions the valiant Ethiopian Jews must endure create an almost insurmountable challenge to their survival.

As this Congress is well aware, the Horn of Africa has been plagued by a severe drought and famine over the past several years. This factor, combined with the political instability within Ethiopia, has caused a large flow of people over the Ethiopian border. Naturally, this includes a significant number of Ethiopian Jews who now need assistance in leaving the refugee camps. Mr. Speaker, the resolution we are passing today calls on the President to utilize his office to make certain that the United States, in cooperation with other governments, takes every necessary step to assist the Ethiopian Jews in securing their dream of reaching Israel. The passage of this resolution should be taken as a clear signal that the people of the United States are firmly committed to the rescue of all Ethiopian Jews.

Mr. Speaker, these brave individuals have cried out for help to reunify their families which remain tragically divided among Ethiopia, the refugee camps and Israel. By passing this resolution today, we can focus greater attention on the imperative of resolving this critical situation. We cannot afford to ignore the pleas of these courageous people. Each individual and government with the capacity to assist the Jews of Ethiopia must do every thing possible to help this desperate community. To do anything less will result in the meaningless loss of life for individuals who are merely seeking to fulfill their basic right to live freely and to practice their faith in peace. I am proud to speak out today in support of House Concurrent Resolution 107 and for the Ethiopian Jews who have struggled valiantly to attain their freedom.●

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join my colleagues who have spoken in favor of the passage of the resolution we are considering here today—House Concurrent Resolution 107 expressing the grave concern of the Congress regarding the plight of Ethiopian Jews. I also wish to commend my colleagues from New York, Mr. SOLARZ, for his consistent efforts in bringing this issue before the House.

Mr. Speaker, as a survivor of the nightmare of the Holocaust, I am determined that I will not be a passive bystander to the annihilation of a very special and unique branch of Judaism. The Ethiopian Jewish community have maintained their beliefs and principles through centuries of persecution and isolation, through poverty and slaughter through perhaps greater suffering even than their brothers and sisters endured in Europe and the Middle East.

As recently as the beginning of this century, the number of Ethiopian Jews was estimated at over 100,000, but today all that remains is a remnant numbering about one-quarter that size. As appalling as these numbers are, they do not indicate the full extent of the persecution that plagues these dedicated people. Current estimates indicate that about 8,000 still remain in their native Ethiopia—unable to leave the land that does not want them. Even if individuals receive permission to immigrate, family members and friends who remain behind are subject to still greater persecution. As one young Ethiopian Jewish boy explained the problem in a recent issue of Hadassah magazine: "We cannot leave. If we do, our parents must suffer for it. But we cannot stay."

The Ethiopian Government has pursued a policy of systematic assimilation of its Jewish population and has vigorously opposed instruction in Hebrew. There have been frequent burnings of Hebrew books, the incarceration of teachers, and the closing of schools where Hebrew has been taught.

Persecution, however, is only one of many problems that face these long-suffering people. The continuing drought in Northern Africa is also exacting a high toll among the Ethiopian Jews. Those located in isolated villages are particularly subject to its effects, and the Jewish community in Ethiopia inhabits precisely such isolated villages. A second additional problem is the domestic unrest and insurgency that currently infest Ethiopia. The State Department's Country Reports on Human Rights Practices for 1983 notes that "Ethiopian Jews are situated in areas of insurgency and they are getting caught in the cross-fire."

Those who have risked their lives and lost their meager possessions through leaving their native Ethiopia have found continuing problems in Sudan, where they have fled. At present it is estimated that some 10,000 to 14,000 Ethiopian Jews are living in camps in the Sudan. Conditions there are also appalling and the prospect for improvement is not good. The numbers who have been able to leave Ethiopia for the Sudan recently are very small.

Mr. Speaker, history has shown again and again the tragic outcome, the vicious injustice that results when religious and racial oppression and persecution are ignored. We are fortunate indeed that many committed individuals continue to work to remind us of the Ethiopian Jews. My good friend Nate Shapiro has been a leader in the effort to remind us of the plight of this people and to take concrete action to help them.

The resolution we are voting upon today is not a solution, but it does indicate the concern of the Congress for the Ethiopian Jews. I urge the administration to take careful note of this resolution that we are approving today, since the administration can take action in many important areas to assist in alleviating the suffering and dislocation of this group.●

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 107, which expresses the concern of Congress regarding the plight of Ethiopian Jews.

The Beta Yisrael, also known as the Falashas, have been living in Ethiopia and in refugee camps outside of Ethiopia. These people suffer from poverty, sickness, persecution and neglect. They have been restricted from emigrating to Israel to be reunited with family and friends. Many regions of Ethiopia have suffered from a prolonged drought. The almost complete failure of the secondary harvest several months ago has intensified the difficult conditions under which the Ethiopian Jews live.

This resolution reflects the concerns of many of my constituents and myself. It encourages the President of the United States to maintain a continuing dialog with the Ethiopian Government on the issue of the welfare and rights of all Ethiopian citizens including Ethiopian Jews. The resolution calls on other governments to allow for the free emigration of Ethiopian Jews, and requests the President to seek ways of assisting the Ethiopian Jews in their efforts.

It is easy for many of us to forget that not all people are able to pursue the religious freedom that we enjoy. Everyone should have the right to practice their religion without restrictions and fear of persecution. The Ethiopian Jews do not have this freedom. It is important that the United States express concern for these people.

I urge those in Congress, the President, and the American people to send our message to the Government of Ethiopia to give freedom to those wishing to emigrate and to those wishing to practice their religion.●

● Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 107.

Throughout history, the Falashas' struggle to survive has been perilous. Once a powerfully independent family of 1 million faithful, they first felt the harsh sting of persecution some 500 years ago. Christian and Muslim forces plundered Falasha villages, stole their land, enslaved the weak and outlawed the practice of Judaism. Poverty stricken, illiterate, and forbidden from following their faith or from owning land, the Ethiopian Jews became outcasts, forced to scrape out a meager existence from sharecropping and small-scale craftwork. By 1948, there were only 40,000 Jews left in Ethiopia. Today, that number has fallen to 25,000.

Despite this hardship, the Falashas have clung to their faith with a certainty and tenacity that we can only admire. Judaism still survives in Ethiopia, even though synagogues have been closed, the teaching of Hebrew has been banned and rabbis have been imprisoned and tortured. The Marxist government of Mengistu also forbids emigration of any kind.

Falasha means "stranger" or "one who does not own land." More than anything else, the Jews of Ethiopia wish to live where they will not be strangers, on the Jewish land of Israel. This resolution will tell the world that we have not forgotten the Falashas and their dreams, and it reaffirms our pledge to do all we can to help ancient Jewish community of Ethiopia unite with their people in the Jewish State of Israel.

I urge all of my colleagues to support House Concurrent Resolution 107.●

● Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 107, expressing the grave concern of the Congress regarding the plight of Ethiopian Jews.

I was pleased to be a cosponsor of this legislation which states that the President of the United States of America should utilize our diplomatic capabilities to secure the welfare and human rights of the Ethiopian Jews as well as Ethiopians of other religious faiths.

It is imperative that we pass this resolution placing the Congress on record in its concern for the plight of the Ethiopian Jews.●

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to lend my support to House Concurrent Resolution 107, which calls attention to the current plight of Ethiopian Jews.

As a cosponsor of this resolution, I strongly support efforts to assist the Ethiopian Jewish community, the Falashas. The word "Falasha" means stranger, and, unfortunately, that is a very symbolic description of the Ethiopian Jewish community.

The details of the Falasha's history are unclear. Until the 19th century, the existence of the Ethiopian Jewish community was a mystery to all other Jewish communities. There has been some speculation on the origins of the Falashas, and some uncertainty on the exact date of their arrival in Ethiopia. However, most sources agree that by the 10th century 1 million Jews lived in Ethiopia.

Many historians have been awed by the ability of the Falasha community to adhere to the teachings of their faith despite centuries of isolation from other Jewish communities, anti-Semitism, enslavement, and forced conversion. These Jews closely follow the Torah, including the celebration of the Sabbath and dietary laws.

In recent times the Falashas have continued to face persecution at the hands of their government, despite their location in isolated villages. During the 44-year reign of Emperor Haile Selassie, the Jews were permitted limited religious freedoms, yet faced ongoing harassment by government officials, which included efforts to force the Falashas to convert and denying them permission to emigrate to Israel. Following the 1974 Marxist revolution, the Falashas situation was again in jeopardy. Although the Jews have not been singled out for persecution by their government, the government's antireligious policies have led to the closing of many synagogues, and the Falashas are still denied the right to emigrate to Israel.

Today it is estimated that 20,000 Falashas live in Ethiopia. The drought in that region of Africa has led to a life-threatening famine. In addition, many Ethiopians are caught in the crossfire of the fighting between the Marxist government led by Col. Mariam Mengistu and antigovernment guerrillas.

As a result of the difficulties facing the Falashas, for years many Ethiopian Jews have tried to leave their homeland and live in Israel. Yet, their government has established an unfortunate policy of denying these Jews the right to be repatriated to what they believe to be their ancestral homeland. In response to this obstacle, many determined Falashas have risked their lives to escape Ethiopia. Their paths have led them to refugee camps in neighboring countries and eventually to Israel. Today, several thousand Falashas are living in Israel and countless others are en route to join them.

I admire these people for their determination to leave Ethiopia and live in Israel. I support a course of action to assist these Jews in their desire to emigrate and urge government officials, here in the United States and abroad, to work together to assist this imperiled Jewish community. I hope that through the efforts of the U.S. Congress and human rights organizations to call attention to the plight of Ethiopian Jews, one day soon the Falashas will be safely resettled in Israel.●

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 107, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the concurrent resolution just agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

WILDLIFE PRESERVE FOR HUMPBACK WHALES

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 136) calling for a wildlife preserve for humpback whales in the West Indies.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.J. RES. 136

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President shall seek a treaty or other appropriate international agreement establishing a wildlife preserve for humpback whales in the West Indies, in the area encompassing the Turks Islands, Mouchoir Passage, Silver Bank Passage, Navidad Bank, and such additional areas as may be necessary to insure the protection of the breeding grounds of the humpback whales.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON].

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Joint Resolution 136 sponsored by our good friend and colleague, Congressman WHITEHURST calls for the President to seek a treaty or international agreement to establish a wildlife preserve for humpback whales in the West Indies.

Mr. Speaker, the governing body in which the United States seeks to pursue its objectives on whaling matters is the International Whaling Commission. The IWC in its wisdom has classified the humpback whale as a protected species thereby prohibiting commercial whaling of this beautiful mammal. Although the IWC clearly defines a policy which calls for the protection of the humpback whale, the application of this policy has proven for the most part ineffective. First, the IWC has no enforcement mechanism. Therefore, it must rely on member nations to voluntarily implement IWC regulations. In the absence of a coordinated effort by member nations, policy application has been inconsistent with the mandate of the Commission. Second, several nations including the Dominican Republic are not members of the IWC and thus do not feel inclined to abide by IWC regulations. As a result, the humpback whale population has dwindled from a high of 100,000 to an estimated low of 6,000.

Mr. Speaker, the establishment of an international sanctuary for the North Atlantic stock of humpbacks in the West Indies as called for in House Joint Resolution 136, is consistent with U.S. policy. This resolution authorizes the President to strengthen our efforts to protect the humpback whales. It was unanimously approved by the Foreign Affairs Committee and is not opposed by the administration. I commend the sponsor of House Joint Resolution 136, Mr. WHITEHURST, for undertaking a leadership role in this area and I urge my colleagues to unanimously support this measure.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Foreign Affairs recognizes that the Speaker has indicated to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries that if House Joint Resolution 136 had been reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs that it would have been sequentially referred to the Merchant Marine Committee. By requesting that this resolution be placed on the Suspension Calendar the Committee on Foreign Affairs did not intend in any way to prejudice the jurisdiction of the Merchant Marine Committee. The Committee on Foreign Affairs appreciates the willingness of the Merchant Marine Committee to waive its right to sequential referral in this instance.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 136, calling for the establishment of a wildlife preserve for humpback whales in the West Indies.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WHITEHURST], the newly bewhiskered Neptune of this body, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON], are particularly to be commended for taking such strong leadership roles in Congress in support of maximum protection for whales.

The Department of State in written comments on this resolution had indicated that it supports the provision of as much protection as possible for whales, particularly those like the humpback, which are so endangered today. Thus, the administration has taken a position consistent with, although not in precise agreement with this bill. In fact, it favors an even stronger approach than this bill envisions. However, we have received no concern whatsoever from the administration on this particular resolution.

Clearly, the creation of an international sanctuary by the International Whaling Commission [IWC] to provide protection for the North Atlantic humpback is a step in the right direction. Such a sanctuary will work to complement the sanctuary that has been established in the Indian Ocean.

Scientific estimates calculate the current stock of Western North Atlantic humpback whales at between 2,300 and 4,100 and their habitation in shallow coastal areas puts them at grave risk as they are exposed to human activity. Sanctuaries of this nature may be the only hope to preserve the species.

Again, I want to express my support for House Joint Resolution 136 and a continued strong U.S. policy of maximum protection for the world's whales. I urge my colleagues to give this measure their unanimous support.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WHITEHURST].

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for yielding. I just rise to take this opportunity to thank both the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH] for their willingness to see this legislation through the House this afternoon.

I also thank the members of the other committees who have contributed to the passage of this bill, as I presume it will be.

I would just close by saying that I cannot imagine a more majestic creature of the sea than the humpback whale. You are correct, this legislation is not going to save the humpback from extinction. But I think it is a major first step forward.

As one who has a maritime district and whose life has always been oriented toward the sea, I feel particularly sensitive about this particular mammal and want to do everything I can to preserve it. I think this bill, as I said, is a major step in that direction.

I thank my colleague for yielding and I yield back.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BONKER. I would like to pose a question to the ranking member or to the sponsor of the resolution. I have no doubt that we should make every effort to protect the species. So my question is not with the intent of the legislation but with the approach.

It seems to me that the International Whaling Commission has been established and the United States is a participating member for the purpose of identifying those species that are endangered through technical committees, plenary sessions, attempts to set quotas, and indeed even provide for a moratorium on the capture or killing of whales. So why would it be necessary to call upon the President to seek new agreements or treaties that are outside an established mechanism for dealing with this problem?

Mr. WHITEHURST. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WHITEHURST. I would answer the gentleman in this way: that we have seen the precipitous decline of this species already. Through the established organization we have not been wholly successful in preventing the demise of the humpback whale.

I make no claim that this bill is going to totally solve the problem. It is just a different approach. For that reason, I believe that the bill has merit.

But I am totally in favor of parallel moves within the IWC if it will protect this mammal.

Mr. BONKER. It seems to me that the IWC back in the midsixties actually provided for full protection of commercial exploitation of the humpback whales. So I guess what you are saying to me is based on the data that is presented here, that the population is down from 100,000 to 6,000 and that the IWC is not doing its job that it is not monitoring this thing. And if there is a serious decline of the resource, is it because of commercial exploitation, is it because fishermen of these various countries are engaging in whaling, even though it is contrary to IWC quotas? Is that the problem?

Mr. WHITEHURST. I can only presume that, unless the whales themselves are contributing to it in some way.

Mr. BONKER. Well, in which case the treaty would not be necessary.

Mr. WHITEHURST. Absolutely. I do not think that is the case at all.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, does the ranking member have any light to shed on this question?

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I would only stress to the gentleman that this resolution is neither designed to necessarily go beyond the IWC or to work within the IWC. It is intended to say that we will work with the IWC if it works; if it will not, we will not.

Mr. BONKER. If the gentleman would yield further, that is not what the resolution says.

The resolution calls upon the President to seek other treaties with appropriate international agreements. My question has to do with the mechanism that is now in place. I have attended all four or five IWC sessions and I think their track record is pretty good. When they set quotas, when they establish moratoria, when they call upon participating countries to cease whaling activity, generally everybody complies. And I do not know if it is necessary to call upon the President to seek new treaties or agreements under these circumstances.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. I think from the perspective of the standpoint of the committee, the statistics tell the tale. We are prepared to go beyond the IWC if it is necessary but preferably to work within the IWC if it works. But there is nothing in this resolution that is intended to undermine the IWC. There is also nothing in this resolution that is intended to say that we cannot work to develop treaties with IWC leadership. I think that is implicit in the assumptions of those who drafted the resolution.

Perhaps the author of the joint resolution has a comment.

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WHITEHURST. The gentleman is absolutely correct. As I said it is a parallel move, it is an additional arrow in the quiver, if you will, to try to save this mammal.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. If I may comment further, let me stress that the Dominican Republic is not a member of the IWC. That is one reason why there may need to be parallel efforts.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BONKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I did not know the Dominican Republic was a whaling country. You know, at the outset all of the whaling countries actually belonged to the IWC. Then over a period of time the so-called conservation countries joined the organization.

Now I am not against the resolution. I am for protecting whales but I have to differ with my distinguished colleague that if you instruct the President to seek other treaties you are in effect undermining the IWC unless somehow they can explain why they cannot do the job of protecting the humpback whales.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. YATRON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman knows I do support the IWC. But as I said in my statement, first the IWC has no enforcement mechanism. Therefore it must rely on member nations to voluntarily implement the IWC regulations, and in the absence of a coordinated effort by member nations policy application has been inconsistent with the mandate of the commission and second, several nations, including the Dominican Republic, are not members of the IWC and thus do not feel inclined to abide by IWC regulations.

Also in responding to the gentleman's [Mr. BONKER] question about the Dominican Republic as to whether they were a whaling nation, they are a fishing nation. But I think part of the problem is that some of the member nations have not been as cooperative as they could be.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. I would be delighted to yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BONKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, insofar as I know almost all the participating members of the IWC do indeed comply with the quotas and with other restrictions that are imposed. That is why they fight so vigorously when these recommendations are put forth by the IWC, Japan being a case worth noting.

The only enforcement that we have presently is through the possible cutoff of fishing rights for countries that do violate those quotas.

That law applies I think to both participating and nonparticipating members of the IWC.

It is not worth raising many more questions at this point. I want to commend the author of the resolution [Mr. WHITEHURST] for drawing our attention to the plight of the humpback whales, and for that reason alone I will support the resolution.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. I thank the gentleman.

Let me just conclude by stressing that what we are not dealing with here is the issue of quotas, we are dealing with the issue of a sanctuary. In establishing a sanctuary there are two prominent governments, the Dominican Republic and the United Kingdom, which have interests in this region and the Dominican Republic is not a member of the IWC. The IWC certainly provided an excellent role in establishing a sanctuary in the Indian Ocean. It would be our hope that they would establish a similar type of role here in this particular region of the world. We are not dealing within this resolution the issue of quotas, we are dealing with the issue of a sanctuary. It is a role that the IWC can play but in this particular region it might be helpful to bring in other parties.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BONKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the gentleman pointed out the IWC action to designate the Indian Ocean as a sanctuary.

Does the gentleman know whether there have been efforts made to the IWC or initiatives to the IWC to establish the West Indies as a sanctuary for this purpose? If not, would that not be a proper course of action rather than entering into new agreements?

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the administration has informed us by letter that they are willing to work with the IWC, very willing, in terms of making a sanctuary type of agreement.

But let me stress that whether or not the IWC is a part, the idea of a sanctuary stands in and of itself. What this resolution does is make sure that it is all-inclusive, that whether or not the IWC is involved, a sanctuary shall be our goal and that is not at all irrelevant.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I see the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES] has entered the Chamber, and at this time I would like to thank the chairman for his cooperation in helping to bring this bill to the floor of the House at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] that the House suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 136.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 136, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the joint resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

ESTABLISHING THE CONNECTICUT COASTAL NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5464) to establish a Chimon Island National Wildlife Refuge, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5464

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

SECTION 1. (a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) Chimon Island, off the coast of Norwalk, is the most important heron rookery in Connecticut and contains one of the three largest wading bird colonies in the Northeast United States;

(2) Milford Point, a narrow ten-acre tombolo, is one of the few remaining nesting sites in Connecticut for the piping plover;

(3) Falkner's Island supports the only significant breeding population of the roseate tern in Connecticut and the only major population of the common tern; and

(4) Sheffield Island is an excellent potential nesting habitat for heron.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes for which the Connecticut Coastal National Wildlife Refuge is established are—

(1) to enhance the populations of herons, egrets, terns, and other shore and wading birds within the refuge;

(2) to encourage natural diversity of fish and wildlife species within the refuge;

(3) to provide for the conservation and management of all fish and wildlife, within the refuge;

(4) to fulfill the international treaty obligations of the United States respecting fish and wildlife; and

(5) to provide opportunities for scientific research, environmental education, and fish and wildlife-oriented recreation.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. As used in sections 1 through 5 of this Act—

(1) The term "refuge" means the Connecticut Coastal National Wildlife Refuge.

(2) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

(3) The term "selection area" means the lands and waters of Chimon Island, Milford Point, Falkner's Island, and Sheffield Island in the State of Connecticut.

ESTABLISHMENT OF REFUGE

SEC. 3 (a) SELECTION.—(1) Within ninety days after the effective date of this Act, the Secretary shall—

(A) designate approximately one hundred and forty-five acres of land and waters within the selection area as land which the Secretary considers appropriate for the refuge;

(B) prepare a detailed map depicting the boundaries of the land designated under subparagraph (A), which map shall be on file and available for public inspection at offices of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, and publish notice in the Federal Register of such availability.

(2) The Secretary may make such minor revisions in the boundaries designated under paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection as may be appropriate to carry out the purpose of this Act or to facilitate the acquisition of property within the refuge.

(b) ACQUISITION.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the Secretary shall acquire (by donation, purchase with donated or appropriated funds, or exchange) lands, waters, or interests therein within the boundaries designated under subsection (a)(1)(B).

(2) The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating shall transfer jurisdiction over Falkner's Island, Connecticut, to the Department of the Interior; except that the Coast Guard shall remain responsible for the operation and maintenance of the lighthouse on the island.

(c) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish the national wildlife refuge, by publication of a notice to that effect in the Federal Register, whenever sufficient property has been acquired under this section to constitute an area that can be effectively managed as a national wildlife refuge.

ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 4. The Secretary shall administer all lands, waters and interests therein, acquired under section 3 of this Act in accordance with the provisions of the National Wildlife Refuge System Administration Act of 1966 (16 U.S.C. 668dd-668ee). The Secretary may utilize such additional statutory authority as may be available to him for the conservation and development of wildlife and natural resources, the development of outdoor recreation opportunities, and interpretive education as he deems appropriate to carry out the purposes of the refuge.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 5. There is authorized to be appropriated to the Department of the Interior $2,500,000 from funds not otherwise appropriated from the Land and Water Conservation Fund for the acquisition of lands for the refuge, which sums shall remain available until expended.

ATCHAFALAYA BASIN

SEC. 6. The lands and waters and interests therein acquired in the Atchafalaya Basin with funds provided under Public Law 98-396 shall be considered to be an area within the National Wildlife Refuge System; except that (1) the area shall be administered by the State of Louisiana after a mutually satisfactory cooperative agreement regarding the administration of the area is entered into with the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, and (2) during such time as the State of Louisiana administers the area, it shall be treated as a fee area for purposes of applying section 401 of the Act commonly referred to as the Refugee Revenue Sharing Act (16 U.S.C. 715s) to the local governments concerned.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 7. This Act shall take effect October 1, 1984, or on the date of its enactment, whichever date is later.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. PRITCHARD] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the next bill before us today is H.R. 5464, legislation to establish the Chimon Island National Wildlife Refuge, consisting of approximately 140 acres.

The bill authorizes an appropriation of $2.5 million to purchase these islands including Chimon Island, Milford Point, Faulkner Island, and Sheffield Island.

These islands contain diverse wildlife habitat and this habitat is threatened due to the close proximity to New York City. There is a great deal of pressure to develop these natural areas due to the scarcity of undeveloped real estate in the vicinity.

The bill also makes those lands acquired under the recently signed Supplemental Appropriations Act and located in the Atchafalaya basin of Louisiana a part of the National Wildlife Refuge System and states that such lands will be managed by the State of Louisiana under a cooperative agreement with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

The Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee reported this measure by a unanimous voice vote.

I urge my colleagues to pass H.R. 5464.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RATCHFORD].

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from North Carolina for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of H.R. 5464 as an original cosponsor of this legislation to create a National Wildlife Refuge from several properties along the Long Island Sound. On behalf of the Connecticut congressional delegation and the people we represent, I would like to thank Chairmen WALTER JONES and JOHN BREAUX for moving this bill forward as quickly as they have.

For those of us in Connecticut and elsewhere who are concerned about quality of life, this legislation clearly is worthy of our support. The Connecticut coastline and the islands that are sprinkled along its edge have long been known as a tremendous natural resource, full of shorebirds, wading birds, and the habitat required to sustain them.

With time, however, has come tremendous pressure on the vital nesting places, rookeries, and other sites needed to keep these bird species thriving. If the habitat needed for these birds is not preserved now, it, and the birds that depend on it, will soon be gone forever.

H.R. 5464 will set aside four tracts of land—Chimon Island, Falkner Island, Sheffield Island, and Milford Point—to keep them protected from encroachment by the bulldozer. It is a small but greatly needed step toward preserving the vanishing natural heritage of the Long Island Sound.

Mr. Speaker, I know of no opposition in Connecticut to this legislation. I know of no opposition to it here in Congress. I do know the administration has objections to it at this time, but I believe they can be persuaded. This bipartisan legislation which is supported by Connecticut public officials at the local, State, and Federal levels, deserves our support.

If we are willing to authorize the creation of this refuge, the funds required to purchase the properties will be available. An amendment of mine in H.R. 5973, fiscal year 1985 appropriations for the Department of the Interior, sets aside $2.5 million for land acquisition if this authorizing bill is enacted.

Mr. Speaker, this bill merits quick action and quick passage. I urge my colleagues to give it their full support.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MCKINNEY].

Mr. MCKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, as the author of H.R. 5464, the Chimon Island National Wildlife Refuge Act, I rise today to urge the adoption of this important conservation measure.

On behalf of the citizens of Connecticut, I would like to thank my colleagues in the State delegation, particularly the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RATCHFORD] of the Appropriations Committee, and particularly the Governor of the State of Connecticut, William O'Neill, for the overwhelming support they have given to this effort.

I also would like to thank the distinguished chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WALTER JONES], for his prompt attention to this legislation, and the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX], for all of his help.

This has been a bipartisan effort from the start and one which will surely enhance the quality of life in southwestern Connecticut.

As amended by the Subcommittee on Fisheries, Wildlife Conservation, and the Environment, H.R. 5464 would establish the second national wildlife refuge in Connecticut. Encompassing the islands of Chimon, Sheffield, and Falkner's as well as the 10-acre barrier beach at Milford Point, the new refuge would total 145 acres and be called the Connecticut Coastal National Wildlife Refuge. This refuge is designed to enhance the populations of herons, egrets, terns and other shore and wading birds. And is by many considered to be the second or third most important such breeding area on the east coast of the United States. Its creation would be a great step for wildlife preservation not only in Connecticut, but also our Nation. The lands to be protected clearly are of national significance, particularly for many of these endangered species.

The urgent nature of this legislation is underscored by ongoing attempts to purchase these coastal sites for real estate development. With land values in southwestern Connecticut among the highest in the country, and with a serious lack of undeveloped coastal land within a reasonable proximity to New York City, there is imminent danger that these lands will be lost for future generations. Serious offers have been made for Chimon, Sheffield, and Milford Point—offers that, if accepted, would level an irreversible blow to the habitat of the Northeast's shore birds. Unless action is taken soon, this critical coastal habitat will be lost forever.

Presently, only three-tenths of 1 percent of Connecticut land is federally owned, the smallest percentage of Government-owned land in the 50 States. We in Connecticut have waited 15 years for the chance to create our second Federal refuge. Now, the House-passed version of the Department of the Interior appropriation bill for fiscal year 1985 includes $2.4 million for acquisition of the proposed refuge. Expenditure of funds, however, is of course contingent upon enactment of this measure. Since the entire $2.4 million will be nontax money taken from funds not otherwise appropriated from the Land and Water Conservation Fund and, therefore, will not add to our mounting Federal deficit or be a drain on the U.S. Treasury, I am eager to see this legislation become law.

Mr. Speaker, I must also add that there is an individual by the name of Mr. William Garafalo who has been a constituent of mine and a native of Norwalk, CT, for all of his life.

He is the gentleman who owned Chimon Island and he has, in truth, given this country quite a gift because he has been offered as high as $2.6 million for that one island alone and has agreed to sell it to the Nature Conservancy which will transfer it to the Federal Government for $1.3 million so that this priceless asset, which, by the way, is zoned for development, which is cut up on the plat plan, will never fall prey to the developer and be lost to the birds that make it such a beautiful and incredible area just a few miles away from one of the major interstate highways and three major cities in the lower part of Connecticut.

Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. RATCHFORD. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman is absolutely correct. If this land is gone, it is gone forever, because throughout this entire area what we have seen is development after development after development spring up right on the edge of the coast and that then means that coastal area is not available.

Second, it needs to be said that the funding is in place, at least as far as the House is concerned. We have already passed through this body the Interior appropriation which provides the funding for this critical area of land.

We face a crisis and that is the onslaught of the bulldozer. But we have an opportunity and that is an opportunity to say to our children and their children we have done something to preserve quality of life in southern Connecticut.

I think this unique combination is one that sought to be taken advantage of and this bill provides that opportunity.

Mr. McKINNEY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I would simply add that it is very seldom that we are able in this body to do something that will be permanent. So many of the things that we do are transitory in nature, but I think that it is a great accomplishment for us to be able turn around and say to the State of Connecticut and the people of the Northeast that forever this land will be there as we see it today.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support H.R. 5464, which establishes a Connecticut Coastal National Wildlife Refuge and provides that lands and waters acquired in the Atchafalaya Basin, LA, with the $10 million appropriated under the fiscal year 1984 supplemental appropriations, shall be considered to be an area within the National Wildlife Refuge System to be managed by the State of Louisiana under cooperative agreement with the Fish and Wildlife Service.

Testimony before the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee dramatically underscored the need for the establishment of a Connecticut Coastal Wildlife Refuge as proposed by the Connecticut congressional delegation. The lands and waters included in this bill represent a valuable wildlife habitat resource which, at present, is subject to extremely active urban development.

The gentleman from North Carolina has already described the value of the resources of the Atchafalaya basin in Louisiana. It is appropriate that we begin the process of acquisition which was contemplated in a plan developed by the Corps of Engineers for the basin. It is also appropriate that these lands and waters be managed by the Louisiana Department of Wildlife and Fisheries, since they will be responsible for the rest of the area which will be acquired for public access. Inclusion of these lands and waters in the National Wildlife Refuge System will ensure that the refuge will be administered in a manner consistent with the rest of the areas in the National Wildlife Refuge System.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that both of these areas will be worthy additions to our protected wildlife habitat, and therefore urge my colleagues to support H.R. 5464.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for his leadership and initiative in helping to move this bill so promptly through his committee to consideration on the floor.

□ 1700

As my two colleagues from Connecticut, Mr. McKINNEY and Mr. RATCHFORD, have both pointed out, this is a critical move that I hope we will make in approving this legislation.

We have in my district two pieces of property that are covered by this legislation, both of which are critical to the wildlife which survives along the coast of Connecticut despite the enormous development activities that have gone on there. Falkner Island, which is located off the town of Guilford, is perhaps the easiest to preserve of the properties that are contained in this legislation. Falkner Island already belongs to the Coast Guard; so what is involved is a transfer of ownership.

On the other hand, without this transfer of ownership we have no guarantee that the Coast Guard might not develop in the future other plans for this land rather than to preserve it as a wildlife refuge.

Milford Point, which is in the city of Milford, is right now threatened with development, and through the vehicle of this legislation it can be preserved forever. Yet if this legislation were not to pass and if time were to pass instead with this property continuing in private hands, we are certain that this land will be turned to development. This is some of the very last land that exists in the city of Milford that has not already been built up, and it is critical land for a great variety of species of wildlife, in particular birds that otherwise may become extinct in our area of the country if not in the whole world.

Connecticut has so far, as has been mentioned, had very little assistance from the Federal Government in the creation of parklands and lands set aside for wildlife. It is extremely important and appropriate that we at this time get this assistance from the Federal Government out of funds that are set aside for this purpose in order that the people of Connecticut may benefit from the continuation of the wildlife and the birds, in particular, that are so rare, and also that the whole country be benefited by these lands being set aside, these species being protected, and the onslaught of development which is otherwise inevitable being kept at least within some reasonable bounds.

With respect to Milford Point, right now there is litigation in the Connecticut courts that could result in 22 condominium units being built on this 10 acres of land, totally obliterating the opportunity of the birds to nest there and the wildlife to exist there. It is just this kind of threat that this legislation is aimed to cure.

I would like to once again thank the chairman of the full committee, as well as the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BREAU], for their support and assistance, along with the ranking minority members, and I would like to commend my colleague from Connecticut [Mr. McKINNEY] for his initiative in moving this bill, and my colleague [Mr. RATCHFORD] for his work in the appropriations process which has put in our House-passed legislation the funds to make this purchase possible. I would also like to commend the Nature Conservancy in Connecticut which has played a key role in assembling the information to support the presentation before this House to allow this legislation to gain approval at the committee level and, I hope, very shortly, in the full House.

I thank the chairman again.

● Mr. BREAU. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5464, would establish a National Wildlife Refuge consisting of several small islands and a barrier beach along the Connecticut coast. These islands are valuable habitat for a number of species of wildlife, most notably herons, terns, and other shore and wading birds. The refuge would become part of the National Wildlife Refuge System and would be managed by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service pursuant to the National Wildlife Refuge System Administration Act of 1966 and other applicable statutes. The legislation contains an authorization of $2.5 million for acquisition of the refuge.

Mr. Speaker, the areas that would be included in the National Wildlife Refuge System following the passage of this legislation will be worthy additions to a system that now includes over 400 national wildlife refuges. Chimon Island, the largest of the areas that would be included, supports Connecticut's most significant heron rookery and one of the largest wading bird colonies on the northern seaboard. Falkner's Island, currently owned by the Coast Guard, supports Connecticut's only breeding population of roseate terns and most of the nesting population of common terns.

Milford Point is one of the few nesting areas remaining for the piping plover and other shore birds. Sheffield Island also has great potential as habitat for shore and wading birds.

The legislation was amended in committee to change the name of the proposed refuge to the Connecticut Coastal National Wildlife Refuge to reflect the fact that the refuge contains a number of units along the Connecticut coast.

H.R. 5464 also includes a provision to clarify the use of funds appropriated to the Fish and Wildlife Service under the Supplemental Appropriations Act, recently signed by the President, to acquire lands within the Atchafalaya Basin in Louisiana. That act appropriated $10 million to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to acquire lands under the Fish and Wildlife Act of 1956 and other authority.

For those of you not familiar with Louisiana, the Atchafalaya Basin is one of the great natural areas of this Nation. It is essentially a huge river swamp, encompassing more than 500,000 acres of wetlands that may produce as much wildlife as any area in the country. It is home to an astonishing diversity of wildlife, including herons, egrets, and other wading birds; mallards, wood ducks, and countless other waterfowl; black bears, deer, bobcat, muskrat, and other mammals; and countless alligators. From its waters comes the Louisiana crawfish, an indispensable part of cajun cuisine, as well as bass, catfish, and other fish.

The debate over conservation of the Atchafalaya Basin has been going on for years in Louisiana. Flood control, agriculture, energy development, recreation, and other interests in the basin were difficult to reconcile. Recently, however, all of the parties involved developed an agreement that resolves the major disputes. The agreement, which is incorporated in a plan developed by the Corps of Engineers for the basin, specifies flood control measures, water flow rates, and the purchase of flowage easements designed to keep the basin in a natural state while providing flood protection for surrounding communities.

The plan also calls for the acquisition and management of 90,000 acres within the basin for public access. The Dow Chemical Co. has donated 40,000 acres. The acquisition of the remaining 50,000 acres is to be split between the State of Louisiana and the Federal Government. All of the public access lands are to be managed by the State of Louisiana. The State has recently purchased approximately 10,000 acres and has plans to acquire additional lands in the near future.

Authorization for the implementation of the comprehensive plan for the Atchafalaya, including the acquisition of public access lands by the Corps of Engineers, is included in the water resources legislation that has passed the House.

The provision relating to the Atchafalaya included in H.R. 5464 simply clarifies how the Service is to use funds contained in the fiscal year 1984 Supplemental Appropriation Act. Lands acquired will become part of the national wildlife refuge system but will be managed by the State under a cooperative agreement with the Fish and Wildlife Service. The National Wildlife Refuge Administration Act requires that refuges are to be administered by the Secretary of the Interior through the Fish and Wildlife Service. However, it would make little sense to split the management responsibilities of the basin between Federal and State agencies. Since the State is already managing in excess of 50,000 acres in the basin, it is only sensible that they should be the management authority. It is our intent that the area be managed by the State in a manner consistent with the provisions of the National Wildlife Refuge Administration Act and other applicable statutory authority.

The legislation, as amended, also provides that the area is to be considered as part of the refuge system for the purposes of the Refuge Revenue Sharing Act. This act provides in lieu of tax payments to local governments. This is consistent with the policy for other refuges managed under cooperative agreements, such as Matagorda Refuge in Texas.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the members of the Connecticut delegation, all of whom co-sponsored this legislation and all of whom have worked diligently to assure its passage. Through their efforts, we will protect one of the few remaining natural areas in Connecticut for future generations. ●

● Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support for H.R. 5464, the Connecticut and Louisiana wildlife refuge bill. This legislation establishes a Connecticut Coastal National Wildlife Refuge on Chimon Island, Milford Point, Falkner's Island, and Sheffield Island in the State of Connecticut. In addition, the legislation directs that Public Law 98-396 lands in the Atchafalaya Basin in Louisiana be included in the national wildlife refuge system.

The wildlife refuge proposed in this bill is important to the State of Connecticut. Our State, in the middle of the Boston-New York corridor, is highly urbanized, the cost of land is high and open spaces are at a premium. Although there is a great appreciation of nature and a strong commitment to the conservation and preservation of environmental resources among the residents of Connecticut, the pressures to develop open land increase daily, and fewer and smaller ecologically valuable properties remain.

Given these circumstances, it is little short of incredible that the Federal Government has the opportunity to designate as a wildlife refuge such outstanding areas in Connecticut as the three islands and the tombolo included in H.R. 5464. Chimon Island, the largest of the four sites, is Connecticut's most important heron rookery and, according to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the site of one of the three largest wading bird colonies on the northeast coast of the United States. In addition, it is a breeding ground for several species that nest nowhere else in Connecticut. Milford Point, a barrier beach, provides a nesting site in Connecticut for two rare birds, the piping plover, a candidate for the endangered species list, and the least tern, a species considered to be on a long-term decline throughout North America. Likewise, Faulkner's Island provides a habitat for the roseate tern and for the State's only major colony of common terns. Sheffield Island, like Chimon Island within commuting distance of New York City, is an undeveloped area with the potential to be an important nesting habitat for Chimon Island herons.

Time is running out for the preservation of land in Connecticut. On the local level, the Nature Conservancy is to be commended for having embarked on an ambitious program to purchase and conserve irreplaceable environments in the State of Connecticut and the Audubon Society is to be commended for its scientific research providing information on the ecological importance of many of these areas. The Federal Government also has a responsibility in the preservation of critical areas. Chimon Island, Sheffield Island, Faulkner's Island, and Milford Point are of national significance and well worth being held in public trust through designation as a Federal wildlife refuge. I urge the House's favorable consideration of H.R. 5464. ●

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5464, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish the Connecticut Coastal National Wildlife Refuge, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and to include therein extraneous material, on the subject of the special order today by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING ON TOMORROW

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a.m. on tomorrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING ON THURSDAY NEXT

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a.m. on Thursday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATION ON REGULATION OF PORNOGRAPHY TRANSMITTED OVER LOCAL CABLE TELEVISION

(Mr. NIELSON of Utah asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, today Mr. ECKART and I are introducing legislation to ensure that local and State government authorities continue to have power to regulate pornography transmitted over cable television systems.

Earlier this summer, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the Federal Communications Commission in Washington, DC, has the exclusive power to regulate the content of programming transmitted over cable TV.

Unfortunately, the Supreme Court's decision has the effect of nullifying hundreds of State laws, city ordinances, and local cable television franchise agreements around the country which give local and State officials the power to regulate pornography.

In my own State of Utah, for example, a group is attempting to get a Federal district court to nullify a Utah State statute that regulates pornography on cable television because of the Supreme Court's ruling.

The bill we are introducing today is quite simple. It merely states that, notwithstanding the Supreme Court's decision, local and State governments may continue to regulate pornography just as they do today.

I include in the RECORD at this point the text of our bill.

H.R. 6220

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 2 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 152) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to affect the criminal or civil liability of programmers or operators of cable television systems pursuant to the Federal, State, or local law of libel, slander, obscenity, incitement, invasions of privacy, false or misleading advertising, or other similar laws, except that operators of such systems shall not incur any such liability for any program carried on any channel designated for public, educational, or governmental use or on any channel designated for commercial use by persons unaffiliated with the operator."

GENERAL CONAWAY CITED FOR ZUCKERT MANAGEMENT AWARD

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I want to add my name to those who have already congratulated Maj. Gen. John B. Conaway, Director of the Air National Guard, for his selection as the 1983 winner of the Eugene M. Zuckert Management Award.

General Conaway's work in the force modernization and in improving mission readiness of the Air National Guard as part of the total force has been an outstanding contribution to the overall capability of the Armed Forces of the United States.

General Conaway has been a strong and decisive leader within the National Guard Bureau and I am proud to know that his efforts have not gone unnoticed. I want to include the text of the citation which accompanied this fine award and again, I offer my congratulations on a job well done.

The citation reads:

CITATION TO ACCOMPANY THE 1983 EUGENE M. ZUCKERT MANAGEMENT AWARD TO MAJ. GEN. JOHN B. CONAWAY

Major General John B. Conaway, as Director, Air National Guard, demonstrated superior management ability in improving the Air National Guard as a vital element of the Total Force.

With personal expertise, outstanding initiative, foresight and direction, General Conaway concentrated his talents on force modernization and mission readiness. His management accomplishments extend to every functional area and his credibility as an astute manager of resources is known and accepted throughout Congress, OSD, the Air Staff, States and ANG units. His many achievements contributed significantly to insuring the Air National Guard can achieve its goals as part of the Total Force and that as a nation we can meet our worldwide commitments. His actions dramatically increased the combat readiness and sustainability of units nationwide and led to attainment of the highest state of equipment modernization in the history of the Air National Guard. His efforts to emphasize recruiting, retention, training, ground and air safety, operational, logistical, and facility support are indeed commendable and will have a lasting favorable impact both on the national and international scene. Numerous programs he developed, guided, or directed have been acknowledged and accepted Guard and Air Force-wide. Additionally he improved many programs affecting human relations and employee motivation.

These distinctive achievements of Major General Conaway demonstrated his outstanding management talents and reflect great credit upon himself, the Air National Guard, and the United States Air Force. ●

JUVENILE INDIAN ALCOHOL AND DRUG ABUSE PREVENTION ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, September 6, Congressman DOUG BERUTER and I introduced the Juvenile Indian Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Act.

Even though alcoholism is the No. 1 health and social problem among Indian people, the Federal Government has made only scattered and noncoordinated efforts at preventing and treating alcohol and drug abuse. Substance abuse is a serious problem in all of American society, but it is even more grievous in Indian country, where extreme poverty and unemployment rates up to 90 percent prevail. It is estimated that alcoholism is at least 8 times more prevalent among Indian people than the Nation as a whole.

Alcoholism is a tragedy for its victims, but its manifestations and effects on other people, especially children, is almost beyond comprehension. One of the manifestations is child neglect and abuse. Parents are role models, negative or positive, for their children. Many Indian families are now into their third or fourth generation of alcohol abuse.

I have seen many children in South Dakota who have been neglected or abused physically and sexually by alcoholic parents. And although it is difficult to accept, I also know that these children may, as adults, emulate their parents behavior. There are homes at Pine Ridge where people, thankfully, take in young children because the children's parents, victims of alcoholism are not able to help them get fed, dressed and off to school. Many children are born with fetal alcohol syndrome. I know that Congressman BERUTER, who coauthored this legislation, visited a special education school for Indian children last week where 25 percent of the children have fetal alcohol syndrome. And I have received letters and phone calls about the use of lysol on Indian reservations.

I have been told of school yards littered with lysol cans. In some instances grocers now have to keep lysol behind the counter, as though it was a prescription drug. Even this, however, is not a sure way to keep lysol from being abused.

It is important for us to be cognizant of the fact that the Indian population is very young. Indian people have the highest birth rate in the Nation. They also die the youngest. The average age of death for Indian people is 45. Among the Oglala Sioux, the median age is only 18. These statistics point to the importance of focusing efforts on the prevention of alcohol and drug abuse at an early age, not just the sporadic treatment after the fact.

I received a letter recently from an Indian woman from California, Roxanne Villa, whose 15-year-old daughter, Shannon, died last year at a BIA boarding school of ethanol poisoning. This dedicated mother wrote to offer her assistance in getting legislation passed to help prevent future tragedies such as happened in her family. Mrs. Villa is also beginning an organization to help young people, especially Indian youth, through recreational activities. There are, tragically, many such incidences of preventable deaths of young Indian people.

Our legislation aims to focus on youth by requiring that all BIA and contract schools have alcohol and drug curriculums, developed at the school level, for grades K through 12. We also hope to bring a much more sensitive and learned reaction to alcohol and drug problems by requiring that a wide range of Government employees on reservations whose jobs bring them into contact with substance abuse receive training in this area. And our bill would also offer to school board and child protection committee members and others this same training.

Very importantly, the legislation requires Indian Health Service, within 2 years to integrate the treatment and followup care of alcoholism into their health services. While IHS funds nearly 200 tribal alcohol programs, they are, by and large, programs to deal with people in the late stages of alcoholism and they do not focus on prevention. IHS medical personnel do not receive training in the No. 1 health problem of Indian people—alcoholism. Our legislation will change that.

As we hold hearings on this legislation, there will be more information forthcoming regarding the human tragedy, incidence, and cost of alcohol and drug abuse. I will share the contents of these hearings with my colleagues. I would ask of my colleagues with Indian constituencies to solicit comments on this legislation and participation in hearings. This effort should serve to increase the sensitivity of Members of Congress to the causes and effects of alcohol and drug abuse in Indian country, and will also serve to strengthen our resolve to provide appropriate assistance to Indian people in their efforts to gain control of their lives and their future by preventing substance abuse among their youth.

George Hawkins of the National Indian Board on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse said in his testimony in April of this year on the Indian Health Care Improvement Act about alcoholism:

If a disease caused uncounted preventable deaths . . . if that disease ranked at the top in cases but at the bottom in support per victim, if that disease reduced life expectancy by at least two decades, was responsible for abused and battered spouses, children and broken homes, if that disease accounted for untold number of homicides and suicides—would not the medical and political world declare an emergency.

I hope Mr. Hawkins is right. There is such a disease in our country. It is not cancer or heart disease. It is alcoholism, and we should all work together to end its ravage.

I include a summary of the Juvenile Indian Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Act at this point in the RECORD:

SUMMARY OF JUVENILE INDIAN ALCOHOL AND DRUG ABUSE PREVENTION ACT, H.R. 6196

Section 101. Memorandum of Agreement to be made between Secretaries of Interior and Health and Human Services to share resources and coordinate programs dealing with the prevention, identification, treatment and follow-up care of alcohol and drug abuse. Memorandum will include authority for agency level BIA Superintendents and IHS Service Unit Director to enter into agreements with tribes regarding alcohol/drug abuse efforts.

Section 102. At the request of a tribe, IHS Service Unit Director and BIA Superintendents will enter into agreement with the tribe to share resources and coordinate programs dealing with the prevention, identification, treatment and follow-up care of alcohol and drug abuse.

Sections 201, 202 and 203. Amend the Indian Education Act to:

(a) include as Part A eligible activities drug and alcohol abuse counselling

(b) earmark in Part B fellowships a 10 percent setaside of fellowships for people pursuing degrees in counseling with an emphasis on alcohol and drug abuse counseling.

(c) include as Part C eligible activities alcohol and drug abuse counseling.

Section 204. Require the Secretary of Interior to keep open some BIA schools in the summer to be available as recreation and counseling centers.

Section 205. Require all BIA and Contract schools to provide alcohol and drug education curricula in grades K-12.

Section 206. Secretary of Interior shall publish, in cooperation with the Secretaries of Education and HHS, a quarterly alcohol and drug abuse newsletter to report on tribal alcohol and drug abuse projects and programs. Publication shall be circulated free of charge.

Section 301(a). Community Health Representatives shall receive, as part of their regular training, one week of training regarding alcohol and drug abuse, which shall include education in crisis intervention and family relations.

Section 301(b)(1). IHS shall provide, directly or through contract, alcohol and drug abuse training to the following people: BIA Education Superintendents, BIA Agency Superintendents, IHS Service Unit Directors, BIA social workers, IHS doctors, nurses, nurses' aides and paramedics.

Section 301(b)(2). IHS shall offer, directly or through contract, alcohol and drug abuse training to the following people: BIA, Contract and public school boards (on or near reservations, including Oklahoma and Alaska) and parent advisory committee members, child welfare protection committee members, Urban Indian Center counselors, home-school liaison personnel funded under the Indian Education Act, supervisors of emergency shelters and tribal college educators (unless the college already offers this service to its employees).

Section 401. BIA shall provide, as part of its training for law enforcement personnel, education regarding alcohol and drug abuse.

Section 402(a)(1). Indian juveniles arrested by any tribal, federal or BIA law enforcement officer shall, whenever possible, be detained in a temporary emergency shelter, foster home, or community-based treatment facility in lieu of incarceration. Where states exercise criminal jurisdiction in Indian country, law enforcement personnel are encouraged to place juveniles in above mentioned places in lieu of incarceration.

Section 402(b)(1). BIA shall establish a program to compensate families to serve as temporary emergency shelters for juveniles apprehended for alcohol and drug related offenses.

Section 501. IHS shall, within 6 months, report to Congress on the size of the juvenile Indian population in need of residential alcohol or drug treatment, where such facilities should be located, and the cost of providing such treatment.

Section 502. IHS, within 2 years, shall provide comprehensive alcohol and drug treatment services, including detoxification and counseling.

Section 503. IHS is authorized to construct or expand existing facilities to serve as regional residential juvenile alcohol and drug treatment centers.●

TARGET DATE FOR METRIC CONVERSION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, the Congress passed the Metric Conversion Act of 1975 with the intention of bringing America's measurement system in line with that of the rest of the world. Then and now, it has been clear to many Americans that one of the most effective ways of improving our country's trade prospects, integrating our military into the NATO alliance, and simplifying the learning of science and mathematics by our schoolchildren is the complete adoption of the metric measurement system. Yet, voluntary implementation of the metric system, which is called for in the 1975 act, has taken place at an extremely slow pace.

Part of the responsibility for this delay rests with the Congress. In its consideration of H.R. 5172, the House amended the bill to delete a modest appropriation for a study of ways in which American business can more easily and effectively convert their measurement systems to metric. The House deleted this study even though many American businesses desired the guidance that such a study would supply. Any momentum toward further metrification has also been hampered by administration efforts to weaken the authority of the U.S. Metric Board.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I commend to you and my colleagues the following resolution passed by the U.S. Metric Association, calling on the Congress to set a target date for the implementation of the metrification of America's measurement system, a step which is long overdue.

[From the U.S. Metric Association, Inc.]

RESOLUTION

To Members of the Congress of the United States of America:

Whereas, President Ronald Reagan has stated, "Let me assure you of my support for the policy of voluntary metrification expressed in the Metric Conversion Act of 1975;" and

Whereas, The U.S. Deputy Secretary of Commerce stated recently, "Metric is a key for competing in world markets (and) the lack of widespread production of metric products in the U.S. has had a negative impact on sales both at home and abroad;" and

Whereas, The Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Productivity, Technology and Innovation concluded, "To compete in the metric world we have to be metric . . . it is baffling to me that not everyone understands the need to use metric;" and

Whereas, The acting director of the Office of Metric Programs in the Department of Commerce stated, ". . . there appears to be a growing recognition in the marketplace of the advantages of an international system of units, and if U.S. industry is to compete effectively in the international marketplace, more widespread use of the metric system will become necessary;" and

Whereas, The Executive Secretariat, Metric Committee, of the Department of Defense pointed out, "Our country is shifting to the (metric) system . . . in order to be able to better compete in the world marketplace and to enhance the allied defense position;" and

Whereas, In this time of educational crisis, the education of today's youth who will be the workers in industry tomorrow, would be greatly enhanced and simplified if the decimal-based metric system which is the language of science and technology, were taught as the principal measurement system in the nation's schools; and

Whereas, An increasing number of foreign countries are requiring imports to be manufactured and labeled in metric dimensions and it is not cost effective for industry to manufacture in two measurement systems, and

Whereas, Companies that have already implemented metric conversion are reporting long-term economic gains as a result of metric conversion and improved manufacturing processes adopted concurrently; and

Whereas, Accelerated depreciation allowances and investment tax credits for modernizing plants and equipment are now in place, these incentives are important to metric conversion, because the retooling and rebuilding process is an ideal time to change to metric.

Therefore be it resolved, That the U.S. Metric Association Board of Directors strongly urges that the Congress set deadlines for completion of the metric transition to ensure that the best interests of industry and the consumer are served. ●

THE LATE HONORABLE CARL D. PERKINS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, one of the nicest things that has happened to me during my lifetime is the opportunity that I have had to serve in the Congress with CARL D. PERKINS.

I will remember him as a friend, an outstanding legislative leader, a symbol of strength, and an example of the character and accomplishment that our legislative branch of Government should always stand for. Few public servants have held such a warm and well-loved place in the hearts of their constituents. The country has lost one of its greatest patriots. I have lost one of my close friends.

CARL PERKINS always believed that if you keep your eyes on the people, you will never lose your way. To CARL PERKINS, there was no limit to the greatness, the glory, and the grandeur of America. He was proud of the privileges he had of serving that country he loved so much. He lived his beliefs; he was a rock of integrity; he was a monument of decency; he was a tower of principle; he was a pillar of compassion and concern for his fellow man.

He was a man of high integrity, a man of conviction, a man with determination and firmness, a man with sure knowledge, a man who cherished and protected the prerogatives of the House, and a man endowed with the qualities of greatness.

He was a practical man. He knew that politics is the art of the possible. He knew also that at times, it is better to bend than to break; that if you want a rose, at times you must put up with the thorns. He also knew extremely well the traditions and the history of our great country. He realized that if you do not know the mistakes of history, you have to live those mistakes all over again.

To CARL PERKINS, there was no such thing as the impossible. He was a gifted man, possessing courage and stubborn determination. He will be missed by his colleagues, but more importantly, he will be missed by the entire Nation.

During the 20th century, Kentucky has not sent a Member to the House of Representatives that established a better record than CARL PERKINS. He was elected chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor in 1967 and served in this capacity for 17½ years. His seniority was No. 4 in the House of Representatives. Among his legislative achievements, he always counted the Vocational Education Act of 1963, the landmark Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, and the provisions for black lung benefits in the Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969. These are only a few of the major bills that he sponsored and succeeded in passing in the House of Representatives.

I recall back in the late 1950's when Gus Kelly of Pennsylvania would bring out each year, his school construction bill. This bill was turned back on a number of occasions and a great many Members in the Congress became discouraged over the failure of such legislation to be enacted. This discouragement did not apply to CARL PERKINS because he believed that the time would soon arrive when elementary and secondary education and higher education would be in order in the House of Representatives and in the U.S. Senate. This time arrived during the early 1960's and CARL PERKINS was one of the leaders in the move to enact such legislation.

CARL D. PERKINS' memorial will not be of bronze or marble. His memorial lives and breathes and walks among us. His memorial is every man and woman and child whose life has been improved as a result of the legislation and the programs he succeeded in enacting while serving as a Member of the House of Representatives. His memorial is to be found in every classroom in this Nation where young people are receiving a better education because of CARL PERKINS' understanding and compassionate handling of his authorization bills. His memorial is to be found in the programs that have benefited the working men and women in this country.

He served with eight Presidents and five Speakers of the House. During the 35 years that he served in the House of Representatives, he had an opportunity on more than one occasion to be elected to other offices, but he believed that he was in the right place to serve his people, his State, and his country, and he had no desire to change positions.

He was a giant in the center of national power, but at all times he remained a modest man. He was a good man who served his country well. He remained always a man's man and he kept the common touch. He was a man who could be compared to the giant, sturdy oak that grows on the rolling hillsides of Kentucky.

The Commonwealth of Kentucky has lost a distinguished son and dedicated servant. The Congress has lost one of its most effective legislators. The people of the United States have lost one of their great champions in the fields of education and labor. I remember his strong voice in behalf of the working people of his district and of the Nation.

His concept of public trust was without parallel and never did he hesitate to speak out against any proposal which he felt was not sound and not to the best interests of our people. In every position he held, either private or public, he achieved distinction. As a Member of Congress, he had those qualities that are essential for leadership, sound justice, patience, perseverance and unyielding adherence to the principles and policies advocated by his party for the welfare of the country. His character, his achievements and his faithful service will be an inspiration to generations yet to come.

Mr. Speaker, I deem it a great privilege and a high honor to have been a friend of CARL D. PERKINS. I have lost a true friend, and this country has lost a great statesman. To his lovely wife and family, I extend my deepest sympathy in their bereavement.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI].

Mr. MAZZOLI. I thank the chairman for yielding to the gentleman from Kentucky, and I would like to first salute my friend from the Second District for having established this special order to honor our departed colleague, CARL PERKINS, and of course, to salute my friend as the new dean of the Kentucky delegation.

The gentleman from Kentucky who is now speaking came to the House 14 years ago, and my first committee assignment was the gentleman from Kentucky's committee, the Committee on Education and Labor. I served on the gentleman's committee for 4 years until I switched to another. If there were one individual who stands out as my political mentor, it would be CARL PERKINS. A more dissimilar person from the gentleman from Kentucky who is now speaking probably did not exist. I am from a city, I have never been on a farm. My people came to this country in relatively recent years. Mr. PERKINS is a man of the soil. He came to his area of Kentucky many generations ago, and yet, Mr. PERKINS took me under his wing and showed me the legislative ropes and enabled me to be a productive Member of Congress at an early age, and at an early time in my service.

If I could, just for one second, Mr. Chairman, perhaps illustrate, as we all have many stories about Mr. PERKINS, and I am sure the gentleman would remember that when he would engage with Mr. PERKINS in one of those treks to the floor, you did not escape that big, burly hand which would grab you just about the middle of your bicep and squeeze and steer you into a wall and away from a wall and bounce you off the place, because he was a very persuasive man and very physical in the way he could make his point.

The gentleman from Kentucky remembers one specific incident I would like to relate as perhaps crystallizing the entire service of CARL PERKINS. It was the conference, the very historic conference of 1972 in which we finally settled on a higher education bill. As my friend from Kentucky, Mr. NATCHER, remembers, Mr. PERKINS labored for week after week after week on that bill. He never could quite get the conference report written.

I will never forget this as long as I live. One day we met at 2 in the afternoon down in the old Supreme Court chamber, which had not been remodeled at that point. This was before the bicentennial. We met at 2 in the afternoon and I figured it would be another one of those desultory meetings that never quite reached home base. Came supertime and we did not rise, we kept working. I got a little hungry, but they sent out for food, and I said, well, we will probably rise at 8:30, 9 o'clock. Eight-thirty, 9 o'clock came and we were still working. There was no sign or symbol that Mr. PERKINS was going to let up and we kept going. Ten o'clock, eleven o'clock, finally midnight and people starting kind of wilting. One o'clock in the morning, 3 o'clock in the morning, I could not believe it, but at 5 o'clock in the morning we got a bill.

I thought that illustrated something very important: Mr. PERKINS would sometimes not necessarily outscintillate and outwork his opponents, but he would outwork them; he would outlast them; he would outpersevere them. No one could outwork, outlast, or outpersevere CARL PERKINS.

So, in that particular instance, more than any in the world, I remember how his tenacity as a human being got a bill which continues to serve to this day young people across America.

So, as a member of the Kentucky delegation, as a Member of the House of Representatives, but perhaps more particularly as a kind of political protégé of our departed friend, I want to take this opportunity to extend my condolences, which of course the gentleman and I extended in person in Hindman at the time of the funeral to the family to express to them the wonderful, fond memories I will carry to my grave of the chairman, of his wonderful attitude as a human being, of the tremendous things he did for the poor, the impoverished, the young people, the mothers and babies of America, and to hope that though I do not expect that to happen soon that perhaps some day this House will be graced with a person like Mr. PERKINS.

His progeny and successor will be a very fine and effective Member of the House but there will be few ever to match our departed friend.

I want to thank my friend for yielding and to again wish him well in his new responsibilities as dean of our delegation.

● Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, this morning I took part in a very moving and beautiful memorial service for our beloved friend and colleague, Chairman CARL PERKINS. I would like to share those remarks with my colleagues at this time:

Mrs. Perkins, Chris, my colleagues and friends. I am honored to take part in this ceremony honoring one of the truly great and special legislators of our time, Chairman Carl Perkins of Kentucky.

When I was elected to Congress almost 32 years ago, Carl was beginning his third term—having won his first election to the house the same year Truman defeated Dewey. It seems like such a long time ago when you put it that way—and yet it seems like the time passed on by effortlessly.

In 1965, Carl Perkins was chairman of the General Education Subcommittee and he was floor manager of the first major piece of legislation to provide aid to primary and secondary schools.

Two years later, he became Chairman of the full Committee on Education and Labor and he oversaw the drafting of the war on poverty bills and he guided them through the House.

The great strides made in the 1960's on behalf of the poor and the middle class—on behalf of the unemployed, the hungry, the handicapped—all were guided by the expert and loving hands of the Chairman. His accomplishments were as big as his great Kentucky heart—and he fought for the needs of coal miners in Appalachia suffering black lung disease; and for the school lunch program and child nutrition throughout the nation.

Carl Perkins was a man of iron will. His stubbornness was unequalled!

Carl never gave up. He fought for what he believed in and he never gave up!

Carl was a deeply caring person. His heart went out to the poor, to the old, to the handicapped, and to the children—and where went his heart, there went his work—and his successes!

I miss Carl. We all miss him—the country, as well as the people of Kentucky. Carl and I shared many views and beliefs. Our political philosophies were fine-tuned in the 1930's and efforts on behalf of labor and the needy came naturally to us.

We shared something else, too—a belief in a simple truth: All politics is local.

Carl Perkins believed "all politics is local" and he lived his public service career with this in mind. No matter what the issue, no matter what the time—Carl Perkins remembered his friends back home.●

Mr. NATCHER. At this time I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank the gentleman for yielding and I will not take much time, although I could take a great deal of time to praise the memory of my dear departed friend, CARL PERKINS.

For those people in Kentucky who will read these remarks and for those who may be tuned in, I want to describe CARL PERKINS' work in this House with three D's. He was absolutely devoted to the wonderful people that he represented in his district in eastern Kentucky. Oftentimes describing them in ways which denoted affection for those whom he knew so well.

He was absolutely dedicated to the principles that he learned as a boy that are deeply rooted in the mountains of Kentucky and he was thoroughly diligent in the pursuit of the goals that he established for their interest that they help establish in the election process.

At his funeral, which I attended, many bills were recited that bore his name: I would say that those bills did not pass this Congress. CARL PERKINS made them happen and that the laws which bear his name are truly a monument to the great service of a great man whom I am pleased and proud to remember as my dear friend.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. NATCHER. At this time, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my colleagues today in expressing a few thoughts in memory of CARL PERKINS, and thank our distinguished colleague from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] and the other members of the Kentucky delegation for making this time available to us today. There is much to be said about the life and accomplishments of our departed colleague, not the least of which is the legacy CARL PERKINS left the American people.

Congressman PERKINS' long record of dedication to education began at the early age of 19, when, after 2 years of college, he began teaching. Later, having received his law degree from the Louisville School of Law, he practiced law, became the Knott County attorney, and served in the Kentucky General Assembly. Following Service in World War II, CARL PERKINS ran for office, and was elected to the Congress in 1949. For more than three decades he faithfully served the people of eastern Kentucky, a testament to his popularity and service.

The many years of his service on the Education and Labor Committee culminated CARL PERKINS taking over the chairmanship of that panel in 1967. Under his leadership, Congress enacted legislation and expanded social and labor programs so important to the fabric of this Nation. CARL's legislative abilities were sometimes underestimated by some of his colleagues, yet the seemingly unsophisticated country lawyer was almost always able to achieve successful passage of measures he had crafted. I remember well the early years of the seventies, when as a freshman Member, I looked to Chairman PERKINS for guidance on the many important issues of the day, including measures authorizing Federal aid to education, college-student assistance, child-nutrition requirements, aid to handicapped children, and the many complex laws pertaining to our labor force. Throughout consideration of these bills, Chairman PERKINS set high standards for promoting American educational advances and maintained a long record of leadership and advocacy for the working man and woman. These outstanding efforts and contributions continue to stand as important examples of congressional concern and action.

All of us in the Congress, and many throughout our land will miss CARL's leadership. The education and labor communities mourn his passing with us, as do the residents of CARL's congressional district in eastern Kentucky. I join in extending our sincerest condolences to his wife, Vera, and to his son, Chris, a Kentucky State legislator. CARL PERKINS left a legacy of achievement that will long endure in this Nation. We will miss him dearly.

Mr. NATCHER. At this time, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, you know upon the death of a Member, we almost always say, well, he cannot be replaced. Sometimes I do not think we really mean that, but in this case every single Member really means it when they say there is no way to fully replace this late departed colleague of ours.

I served on the committee with him beginning in January 1961. I remember at that time the National Defense Education Act was about the only education act or any of those acts of that nature that was on the books. And since that time almost every one of this long list of acts have had his mark on them.

I remember when they first started considering black lung a number of people said: "Well, that could never pass." Certainly that is not a national problem but he certainly made us aware that it is a national problem as soon as it passed.

He came to me, and probably the gentleman in the well, and he said: "Is not there some way we can fund this right away?" As I remembered, it was like July or August. "We cannot wait until there is money in the bank or money in the trust fund before we start funding it," and I went to the subcommittee that day.

It happened to be we were meeting that day to mark up the bill and with the help of the gentleman in the well we borrowed some money from the Social Security Trust Fund for 1 year to fund that black lung bill until they could get some money from the trust fund.

He never stopped working on something that was his objective and that was just one example of how effective he was.

I saw him here three or four times on the floor the 2 or 3 days before he died, and we all knew that he was not feeling well, but we certainly did not assume that he would be taken as soon as he was.

I went to his funeral. I would not have missed that for anything. We saw there how he was loved by the people as he should have been and I considered him to be a personal friend and I consider it to be a great loss not only to this body but to the country as well and so I extend my condolences to his family.

Mr. NATCHER. At this time, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING].

Mr. GOODLING. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Vocational Education, Mr. School Lunch, Mr. Title I, and Mr. Equal Access, and I could go on and on, using titles such as these in describing our late beloved Chairman CARL PERKINS. CARL had a philosophy which became his guiding principle as chairman of the Education and Labor Committee. That philosophy embodied his belief that if children were going to live in dignity and contribute to the greatness of this Nation they must have the very best education possible no matter who they are or where they live. He also believed that good nutrition is very closely tied to good learning.

I had the privilege of visiting with CARL in the northwestern part of his district on several occasions but had never visited his home area until I attended the funeral. From these visits I can only say that if we all represented our constituents as well as CARL did we certainly should receive "A" on our report card. CARL could fight as hard or harder than anyone for what he believed in, but the beauty of CARL as a leader was that he did not seek confrontation and in fact with Jack Jennings as his emissary, sought to work things out in a bipartisan fashion because he believed that children were too important to get caught up in some political battle on Capitol Hill. CARL and I had another common interest in that he loved having thoroughbred brood mares and raising and selling yearlings and I have always dreamed about doing both. We talked at great length about this common interest even at times when people were earnestly testifying before us.

I thank you, CARL for the opportunity to sit by your side during the last 10 years so that I could learn from the master. For millions of Americans who were once children I say thank you for fighting so long and so hard to ensure equal educational opportunities and good nutrition for all. We'll miss your leadership as well as those brisk walks we took from the floor back to the office; when you would say: "Let's walk rather than ride," as your firm grip lifted us a foot off the ground and propelled us onto the walkway rather than onto the subway. You fought a good fight and won a place in the hearts of all who believe that equal education opportunities and good nutrition are a must for all no matter who they are or where they live. Thanks CARL for a job well done. Thanks Verne and Chris for sharing a wonderful man with us.

Mr. NATCHER. At this time, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I had the great pleasure of coming to Congress at the same time as CARL PERKINS came. We were in the same class and our families were close together. Our first children were born about the same time and we really were close friends.

In life, not many people are blessed like we in Congress are with the tremendous opportunity to be of benefit to mankind and to the people we represent. It is a rather rare and exciting and wonderful privilege we have, and nobody that I have served with in Congress in the 36 years I have been here more adequately and fully used that for other people than CARL PERKINS.

He thought of his constituents constantly. He thought of America, for which he had a deep and abiding love because of what he had done abroad fighting for our country and the up-bringing he had and the way he presented himself here on the floor of the House was truly warm and personal every time. I remember times when I would introduce a bill and he would say: "Well, CHARLIE, let us work on that a little bit more and come up with something we can really pass," and finally it would come through because of his great knowledge and experience in passing legislation.

Finally, I would just like to say that the memories we have of great people like CARL PERKINS are among the most treasured memories we have in life. To serve with a man like him, with his great spirit, his great dedication to mankind, and to his God, and to his fellowman has certainly been a tremendous inspiration to me.

When I went back, as so many of you all did, too, to his funeral in those beautiful hills, we could not get there all the way by airplane, we went on a bus, I could not help thinking that if any man every really represented the area from which he came, this man did. I can see why his character had that special quality of a frosty early morning, pure, and the sunlight coming down, a real inspiration to be with him every time I was with him. I am blessed that I had the opportunity to serve with him.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order today.

The SPEAKER. pro tempore (Mr. SMITH of Iowa). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE].

Mr. TAUKE. I thank the gentleman for yielding and for taking this special order to give all of us an opportunity to pay tribute to our departed colleague and friend, CARL PERKINS.

Mr. Speaker, it was an honor to serve on the Education and Labor Committee under Chairman CARL PERKINS. He was a man of honor and a man who pursued his commitments with a quietly fierce tenacity.

CARL PERKINS was committed to the American dream of education. It is a unique dream, even an amazing dream. It seems so impractical and so difficult to realize that we are at times tempted to surrender it for the easier systems of other nations. The American dream of education is that each person, regardless of color, of social status and parental income, regardless of "IQ" or disability, each person will be educated to reach the fullest possible personal potential. We do not winnow our students early on, deeming this one suited for further academic pursuits and that one suited for training in a trade. We seek, instead, to offer a variety of opportunities and directions to try. We try to help our youth shape their dreams of who they are not according to who their parents are, or what their family income is, or even according to what the supposed limits of disability they may have are. We try to offer each student a chance to discover potentials within himself or herself and to build upon that discovery.

It would be a lot easier on all of us—on teachers and school boards, on us in government struggling to find money to pay for the special programs to meet the special needs, and even, I suspect, on our youth—if we opted for an easier path of winnowing our youth at an early age, of offering the possibility of post-10th grade or postsecondary education only to those who showed promise, as measured by success on a test or two.

CARL PERKINS rejected that easier path and sought the harder one of the American dream of universal education, a dream that he insisted must prevail in rural Kentucky classrooms and in inner-city classrooms.

When he believed in a program, when he had determined that this approach as opposed to that was the one to follow in pursuit of the American dream of education, CARL PERKINS would not be turned aside. Not by the furor in the committee, not by delay, not by opposition on the House floor. He had a quiet tenacity of purpose for which he has my deepest respect.

That tenacity was clear, too, in his representation of his district. His people came first. He knew them, he respected them, he wanted to do all that he could to ensure their quality of life.

Education in our Nation has lost a great friend in CARL PERKINS, and his constituents have lost an outstanding representative and spokesman for their needs. His example will be before us as we continue his work in education, recommitting ourselves to the American dream of universal education, and his example will be before us as we seek to represent our constituents with his dedication and tenacity of purpose.

I would like to take this opportunity to provide for the record a copy of an outstanding tribute to Congressman PERKINS written by Congressman Mike Blouin, who represented Iowa's Second District before me. Mike's fine tribute was published in the Cedar Rapids Gazette.

The letter follows:

TRIBUTE TO PERKINS
(By Michael T. Blouin)

A good friend of mine died the other day—Carl Perkins. That name might not mean anything to most people, but it should, because in the 71 years he walked this earth, he accomplished a great deal that affected the lives of all of us.

He was the "gentleman from Kentucky"—the "third senator" of that state—a member of Congress for 39 years, and in this day when public officials are held in such low esteem, Carl Perkins stood out as an example of everything right with government.

When I first met him nearly 10 years ago, he was chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee and I was a freshman member bent on voting out as many sitting chairmen in the House as I could justify. I researched the backgrounds of the chairmen, looking for reasons to vote against them. In Perkins, I thought I'd find a strong-armed domineering dictator who was completely entrenched in the system and insensitive to others. Instead, I found a warm, personable, caring human being who ran his committee in as open a fashion as anyone in Congress.

He surrounded himself with topnotch staff, most of whom joined him for an early morning prayer meeting in his office each day. His belief in God wasn't something he'd talk about; he just lived it.

Too often, when seniority begins to pile up, congressmen become too "national" in scope and forget about their constituencies. Not so with Carl Perkins. He grew up in Kentucky's hills and never forgot his people—and they never forgot him. . . . In trying to respond to what he saw as their needs, he left a legacy of legislative accomplishments few in Congress have ever measured up to—and for which the people of America should be extremely grateful. . . .

Without Carl Perkins, millions of young Americans would never have had the opportunities provided them these past few decades. For he understood, better than most, the connection between an empty stomach and the brain's ability to learn—between a reason for hope and a desire to grow.

Carl Perkins helped to make this world a better place. He was a shining star—a true beacon of hope for the bottom end of our society, for the downtrodden, the forgotten, the ignored, the abused. He was a true friend to millions. He was a friend of mine, and I shall miss him.

Mr. NATCHER. At this time, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BEVILL].

Mr. BEVILL. I thank my friend for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, the Nation lost one of its most outstanding leaders, the House lost one of its able Members, and I personally lost one of my dearest friends with the untimely passing of the Honorable CARL PERKINS of Kentucky.

His service in Congress, spanning 35 years and the terms of eight Presidents, enabled CARL to gain a deep insight into our country's most pressing needs and he worked to fill those needs through prudent and beneficial legislative programs which will service our Nation well for decades to come.

Perhaps CARL's greatest contribution to America was the aggressive and effective legislation he championed in his position as chairman of the Education and Labor Committee in the House. Through CARL's chairing of that important committee since 1967 and due largely to his tireless efforts, Congress developed educational programs which reaffirms America's promise to its children the right to a meaningful and productive education belongs to all our people and CARL saw to it that our country was able to deliver on its guarantee of that education for all its citizens.

I remember just this past year, CARL and his committee worked to reauthorize our programs in the Vocational Education Act of 1963. As educators from around the Nation testified before CARL's committee, they told of story after story showing the success of these programs and the life-changing effects they have had for millions of our citizens.

Equally important, the black lung benefits CARL fought hard to secure for this Nation's coal miners are today providing needed compensation to those whose health was damaged working in our mines. Each day I see the success of this program in my own Fourth District of Alabama.

CARL's concern for his fellow citizen was more than mere lipservice, he dedicated himself to helping all out citizens be able to participate in the greatness of America.

Each year, CARL would bring a number of his constituents to testify before my Subcommittee on Energy and Water Development. CARL's Seventh District of Kentucky was a victim of flooding and his constituents needed assistance in controlling the waters which ravaged their communities. CARL's efforts on behalf of the Yatesville Dam and Reservoir and the Levisa and Tug Forks of the Big Sandy and Cumberland Rivers will mean that flood control can be brought to that area of the country.

While CARL's loss will deeply diminish our House, he has left us and his district with a final gift—the son he was proud of, Chris Perkins. I know that Chris will continue to work to represent the Seventh District of Kentucky with the same dignity, love, and success that his father brought to that office.

At the funeral services for CARL in the small Kentucky town of Hindman, more than 5,000 of us gathered in the high school gymnasium to pay our respects to this truly great American. CARL's friend of more than 30 years and one of the most dignified and respected Members of Congress, the Honorable WILLIAM NATCHER of the Second District of Kentucky, paid tribute to this friend.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert BILL NATCHER's eulogy of CARL PERKINS in the RECORD. It is a fitting tribute for a man who loved his country and its people. We will all miss him dearly, but our land will grow strong because of the many contributions he made to his fellow Americans.

EULOGY DELIVERED BY HON. WILLIAM H. NATCHER AT FUNERAL OF CARL PERKINS

One of the nicest things that has happened to me during my lifetime, is the opportunity that I have had to serve in the Congress with my friend, CARL PERKINS.

During my tenure in the Congress, I have served with about 1,500 Members. None more dedicated than CARL PERKINS and none more courageous.

He was born in Hindman, Knott County on October 15, 1912. He attended the Knott County Grade Schools, Hindman High School, Alice Lloyd College, Lee's Junior College and was graduated from Jefferson School of Law, which is now the University of Louisville Law School, Louisville, KY, in 1935. He was admitted to the bar in 1935 and began the practice of law in Hindman, KY. In 1939, he served an unexpired term as commonwealth attorney from the 31st Judicial District. He was a member of the Kentucky General Assembly from the 99th District in 1940 and in the year 1941, was elected Knott County attorney. He was reelected county attorney in 1945 and resigned on January 1, 1948 to become counsel for the Department of Highways in Frankfort, KY. He was elected to the 81st Congress in 1948 and was sworn in as a Member on January 3, 1949.

He loved his family. I can recall the many occasions when a big smile would result from a question as to how Chris and his wife were doing. He was proud of his son and his daughter-in-law.

During the 20th century, Kentucky has not sent a member to the House of Representatives that has established a better record than CARL PERKINS.

He was elected chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor in 1967 and served in this capacity for 17½ years. His seniority was number four, in the House of Representatives. Among his legislative achievements, he always counted the Vocational Education Act of 1963, the Landmark Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 and the Provisions for Black Lung Benefits in the Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969. These are only a few of the major bills that he sponsored and succeeded in passing in the House of Representatives.

He served with eight Presidents and five Speakers of the House. During the 35 years that he served in the House of Representatives, he had the opportunity to be elected to the Senate on more than one occasion and during this time, he could have been elected to the office of Governor. He believed that he was in the right place to serve his people, his State and his country and he had no desire to change positions.

He was a giant at the center of national power but at all times, he remained a modest man. He was a good man who served his country well. He remained always a man's man and he kept the common touch. A man who could be compared to the giant sturdy oak that grows on the rolling hillsides of Kentucky.

He was a fighter for social justice. He was a legislator for the common people he knew so well.

His concept of public trust was without parallel and never did he hesitate to speak out against any proposal which he felt was not sound and not to the best interest of our people.

In every position he held, either private or public, he achieved distinction. His character, his achievements and his faithful service, will be an inspiration to generations yet to come.

CARL PERKINS was good for the State of Kentucky and for the United States.

During World War II, he enlisted in the Army and saw service in a great many of the major battles in the European Theatre.

During the time that he served on the Committee on Education and Labor, he passed many of the social legislation bills of our history and these landmarks will serve as a living monument to him for years to come.

When first elected to this committee, he served with two men on the committee who later were elected to the Office of President. These two men were John F. Kennedy and Richard Nixon. Both later served in the Senate prior to their election as President. While on the Committee, John Kennedy had a great many speaking engagements, so he had to be away at times when the committee was in session. He believed in CARL PERKINS and he always left his proxy to vote with his friend. He trusted CARL PERKINS.

The committee staff and his office staff loved the chairman and they worked long hours to make their committee and their office the best on the Hill.

No Member has served in the House during the past 35 years that knew more about the Education acts passed in the 1960's, than CARL PERKINS. The same applies to all of the major agriculture bills, higher education, school lunch, child nutrition, head start, adult education, VISTA, student grants and loans, job training and many others.

CARL PERKINS believed that our children are our greatest asset. I remember back during the 1981 reconciliation days when each legislative chairman was called upon to go back and reduce authorizations in order to bring down Federal spending and the deficits. CARL PERKINS had all kinds of difficulty in bringing into line authorizations pertaining to the children in this country, the poor and the helpless and the acts pertaining to the working people in our country.

I deem it a great privilege and a high honor to have been a friend of CARL PERKINS. I have lost a true friend and this country has lost a great Statesman.

To his lovely wife and family, we extend our deepest sympathy in their bereavement.

□ 1740

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON].

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the distinguished gentleman yielding.

I cannot think of a more distinguished host for this special few minutes to remember our esteemed colleague.

As I have been listening, I am quite confident that I am the youngest colleague who has had an opportunity to speak thus far. I must tell you that when we all heard the tragic news and since then have had the chance to reflect upon the life and the meaning of CARL PERKINS to all of us and in particular to me, I could not help but reflect that we were looking at a person who was a country lawyer, but also a national leader, a person who was in the truest sense a liberal, but yet one of the strongest advocates of equal access, a person who was as comfortable in the hills of Kentucky as he was in the hierarchy of our National Government, a person who was a strong partisan Democrat, but one of the more bipartisan committee chairmen of the people we had in the Congress when it came to working for the goals which he believed in.

I had the opportunity over the last two sessions to work on the Education and Labor Committee with Chairman PERKINS, particularly on four different issues. The most important issue I guess in my opinion would have been vocational education. We had a common interest, a common interest because we both came from rural parts of this country. We never wanted to forget the impact of our national programs and our national formulas and our national rules and regulations on those small schools and their ability to also provide an opportunity for education for their people.

Likewise, we saw that same commitment to title I of the School Nutrition and Equal Access, where CARL PERKINS would do anything he found necessary to bring reasonable people together and put together some kind of a bipartisan bill. CARL, as partisan as he was in believing the values of the Democratic party, wanted education to always be a bipartisan effort.

I suppose that I will never forget CARL because as a freshman colleague in our last session of Congress I will never forget the day when there were no Democrats in the committee room and the chairman had to go and make a speech here I believe on the floor, so he turned the gavel over to me and as a young freshman member of the minority party, all of a sudden I was chairing an Education and Labor Subcommittee dealing with home economics and consumer education and preparation.

That is the kind of guy he was. He had his job to do and he wanted to get what was done for education and he certainly was not going to in any way put partisanship in front of the goals that he was after.

The last time that I talked to CARL PERKINS happened to be as CARL was sitting back here near the back of the aisle on the Republican side. I thought when I heard the tragic news of his death that for me it was appropriate, the last time I talked to CARL PERKINS was on the Republican side of the aisle because here was a man who was willing to work with people on both sides.

About a month ago the Milwaukee Journal carried a story on the progress on each Member of the Wisconsin delegation, a performance report card, so to speak, on what each and every one of us had done. The reporter that did the article on me went to CARL PER-KINS and asked him what he thought of STEVE GUNDERSON. CARL said some very, very nice things.

I came up to CARL that week after, the last week of CARL's life, and I said, "Mr. Chairman, you didn't have to say those kind things about me, but I want you to know I appreciate it."

He said, as he always did in that southern Kentucky accent, and he never pronounced the "D" in my name, he said, "Mr. GUNDERSON, I want you to remember that whether you are a Republican or a Democrat, if you are for education, I'm for you."

I think that is really what CARL PERKINS' legacy on the floor of the House of Representatives was all about.

You know, I must tell you again that CARL serves not only in life, but also in death, because so many of you have talked about that day as we traveled to Hindman, KY, and I as a young legislator was taught that day something very important and that was, never forget, no matter how appealing those foreign trips may be, those national positions might be, never forget where you come from, because if you never forget where you come from and the people you are elected to serve, as CARL never did, you will then have that opportunity to truly be a national leader. That is what CARL PERKINS did. That is what I will remember. Most important, that is what this country will benefit from.

I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. KAZEN].

Mr. KAZEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished chairman for yielding to me.

Although few had the privilege and honor of knowing him as well as we in the House of Representatives and his constituents in Kentucky, the people of my district in south Texas—and all Americans—lost a friend, an ally and a leader in the untimely passing of the honorable CARL PERKINS of Kentucky.

No job was too large or too small for this plain-spoken, strong and honest gentleman from Kentucky. He believed that Government was meant to serve the people, and he was a master in seeing that it did.

The Nation knew him as the tenacious chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, a position from which he endeared himself to all persons who believe that the strength of our Nation is built upon the foundation of a good education for all of its citizens.

Time and again, as he managed the myriad of problems that go into this great endeavor, he took the time to meet with local educators and school officials from across the country on scores of local problems. He listened and he felt compassion, he saw his duty and he helped. Although I was not privileged to serve under his leadership on the Education Committee, I went to him many times on problems in my area, particularly on the subjects of impact aid and bilingual education. He never turned me away without an answer, whether it was a hearing, support for an amendment, or simply telling me the right button to push.

I must add that he was more than an effective legislator and a leader in this House. He was a good, decent man who was a friend to us all. He loved his native Kentucky, but he also felt a responsibility to the entire Nation.

I will miss him, and the Nation is poorer because of his passing, but I believe he has left a legacy for future generations that will serve them well. It is our great fortune to have known him.

I know all of my colleagues join me in offering heartfelt condolences to his wife, Verna, and his son, Carl.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to the distinguished gentleman from the First Congressional District of Kentucky [Mr. HUBBARD].

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, today I join with my colleagues in paying tribute to our late colleague, CARL DEWEY PERKINS, who represented the Seventh Congressional District of Kentucky in the House of Representatives from his election in 1948 to his death on August 3, 1984.

To those of us who knew and respected CARL PERKINS, he epitomized the dual role of the Congressman: his devotion to his constituents and his service to the Nation.

There was hardly a citizen of eastern Kentucky who did not know CARL PERKINS personally, and CARL never forgot his roots in the Appalachian Mountains. As Pamela Glass of the Ottaway News wrote in her eloquent article:

In towns like Hazard, Mousie, Neon, Quicksand, and Lost Creek, PERKINS had been in their homes. He had eaten their apple pie, gone squirrel hunting with them, often stayed overnight in their spare rooms. He knew their daddies, their granddaddies, their aunts, uncles, cousins, sons, and daughters.

Yet, on the other hand, his colleagues in the House of Representatives knew CARL as one of our most savvy leaders in his capacity as chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor and on the House floor. CARL's ironclad knowledge of the legislative process and his compassion for the people provided him with the zeal and energy to spearhead the enactment of virtually every piece of social legislation passed by the Congress during his generation. Let me cite just a few of the landmark laws that bore the stamp of CARL PERKINS: the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, the Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, and the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970.

CARL PERKINS won his first congressional term in 1948, the year Harry S. Truman became President. CARL faced few serious challenges after that, and drew no opposition in this year's Democratic primary. He was reelected for his 18th term in 1982, winning with nearly 80 percent of the vote. During his years of office, he worked with 8 Presidents, cast more than 20,000 rollcall votes and promoted the political philosophies of Franklin D. Roosevelt and Lyndon B. Johnson in the House of Representatives.

One of CARL's last legislative battles was his fight for enactment of legislation favoring prayer in the public schools. His efforts for prayer in school and to allow religious meetings after school hours caused him a lot of hard work and effort during the last 2 weeks. Indeed, I sincerely believe that the last 2 weeks of CARL's life were his finest hours in Congress.

Many of us realize his favorite Congressman was WILLIAM H. NATCHER of Kentucky.

To many of his constituents in eastern Kentucky who had voted for CARL PERKINS throughout their entire adult lives, and whose social and economic condition was elevated and dignified by CARL's tireless efforts, CARL's memory will remain for generations to come. And to his colleagues in the House of Representatives, CARL PERKINS' memory will remain enshrined in the legislation he fought for and serve as a beacon to guide us in our future deliberations.

My wife Carol and I both were represented by CARL PERKINS in our earlier years. My wife Carol grew up in Whitesburg, KY. I grew up at Ashland, KY.

My wife and I were very fond of CARL PERKINS. When we married, CARL PERKINS and his son, State Representative Chris Perkins, were in attendance.

We extend our sympathy to his lovely wife Verna, his son Chris and daughter-in-law Cathy.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PETRI].

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] for organizing this special program this evening.

Mr. Speaker, CARL PERKINS was a special kind of man. When he believed in something he was tough as nails. But always he was able and willing to listen to both sides of the question, able and willing to compromise and find the best solution possible.

CARL was always a gentleman. He had civility in superabundance and he displayed a deep wisdom and common sense of the Kentucky hill country from whence he came. The memory he leaves behind is a good and decent one, for CARL PERKINS was a good and decent man.

CARL cared deeply, as others have said, about the people he represented. I once had the opportunity to participate in committee field hearings in his district in Kentucky where we met some of the people served by the Great Society programs that Chairman PERKINS was so instrumental in passing. Often field hearings move at a rather leisurely pace but not those conducted by CARL PERKINS. We were up at dawn and moved around the district so fast that he literally wore all of us out. And at every stop it was apparent how much CARL PERKINS cared about his constituents and their problems, and how much they appreciated his work in their behalf.

CARL PERKINS' concern was not limited to eastern Kentucky. He sought to help all Americans, especially those most vulnerable to neglect or exploitation in our society.

I was proud to have had the opportunity to welcome and have as my guest Chairman PERKINS for hearings in my district in the Sixth District of Wisconsin, and traveled across that district in typical winter Wisconsin weather. In Kentucky it was beautiful and balmy and warm, and in Wisconsin in February the snow was about 6 or 7 feet deep and we had to go practically by caravan from Fond du Lac to Cleveland, WI, to make the different hearings that we had agreed to have.

Chairman PERKINS stayed at my house as a houseguest and had the opportunity to spend an evening with my family. I very much appreciated the opportunity to work under him as chairman of the Education and Labor Committee from the first day of my service here in the U.S. House of Representatives.

There are those in this House who had political differences with Chairman PERKINS. But CARL was a man with many friends and with no enemies. Perhaps in the end that is enough to remember a man by, the way he treated his fellow human beings.

I am glad I had the opportunity to know CARL PERKINS, and I am proud that we were friends.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY].

Mr. OBEY. I thank my chairman in the well.

I think the first time I ever heard the name CARL PERKINS was right after I came here and I had a conversation with Larry O'Brien who was, as people will remember, or used to be, among other things, the Democratic National Chairman. He was also head of the congressional relations for Jack Kennedy when he was President.

When I was elected Larry said to me, he said, "You know one fellow you ought to get to know is a fellow by the name of CARL PERKINS because" he said, "he has a district a lot like yours." And he said, "If you really want to know how to get things done and get things out of the system," he said, "just watch CARL for a while."

□ 1800

He said, "Now I can remember the first time that I was lobbying on the Hill for Jack Kennedy after I was appointed. I would go and I would see a Member about something that I was trying to persuade them on and they would have something that they wanted to talk to me about." After they were finished they would say "Oh, by the way, CARL PERKINS knew you were coming by and he asked me if I would mention that he has such and such a problem in his district and I would really appreciate it if you can help CARL."

He said, "My God, by the time I got off Capitol Hill that day I had 17 different requests from CARL PERKINS."

I think that pretty well sums up the way CARL operated. He never hesitated to push as hard as he could for things he believed in and people he cared about.

This place is a very human institution and I think CARL exemplified that to a fantastic degree.

I think everybody who knew about it appreciated and respected the friendship that CARL had with the gentleman in the well [Mr. NATCHER].

I know that was a deep and abiding friendship with tremendous respect on both sides. When you see those kinds of friendships it strengthens your feeling about this place because as we all know our service here is temporary and friendships which we gain here are friendships which are often lost as people leave the institution or as conditions change within the House. It is always inspiring to see a friendship that stays and a friendship that is strengthened throughout time.

I also remember a night in the Longworth cafeteria when we were at the Texas party, I believe it was, and we were playing a little bluegrass music and CARL wanted us to play "Amazing Grace," which we did. We kind of butchered the tune but we got through it. He liked that and he mentioned it several times.

A lot has been said about morality lately in the country. And I think one of the unique things about CARL PERKINS is that not only did he believe in practicing his religion in his daily life and not only did he believe in trying to further the ability of people to engage in religion in their lives, but he also brought his religious beliefs to bear on issues such as education, child nutrition, and other programs.

So, in the fullest sense I think he represented his deep and abiding faith.

I know I will miss him. He is one of those rare people here who comes, who does his job, who never brags much about it; you could truthfully say of him that he never forgot who he was, where he came from, and who sent him.

I think that is probably the finest compliment you can pay any person in this institution.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman [Mr. NATCHER] for his time.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. McHUGH].

Mr. McHUGH. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished friend from Kentucky for yielding and for giving us this opportunity to pay special tribute to our very dear friend, CARL PERKINS.

Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to have CARL PERKINS not only as a colleague but as a neighbor across the hall in the Rayburn Building. His passing has thus been a particularly painful loss for me and my entire staff. It has become customary for our staffs to share holiday and birthday parties, and we had grown used to the happy visiting back and forth across the hall. This year's highlight, of course, had been the legendary Derby Day party in CARL's office. Amid the sometimes austere formalities of Washington life, it has become a special blessing to share in the kind of gentle neighborliness that CARL PERKINS expressed as naturally as breathing.

To me, that was what was so extraordinary about CARL—how clearly and simply he followed the precept of the master, that, "He who loves his neighbor will fulfill the whole law." It seemed so easy for CARL to make everyone his neighbor. He genuinely loved people, with such immensity and warmth that he was compelled to express that love, not just in ordinary speech, and gesture but in a lifetime of action. Not only his family knew that love, but innumerable people in his beloved home State of Kentucky; and in the wider world many millions of Americans will continue to experience the effects of his caring for them, particularly those who have been limited by life's circumstances and who needed a champion on their side.

He not only loved people but he loved their possibilities—and so he loved principles as well, especially the principle that in this abundant land it was wrong for a person to have to remain choked by poverty and lack of opportunity. Though he was gentle and caring by nature, his unwavering dedication to that principle made him tough and extraordinarily effective in the political arena. That arena was, for so many years of his life, this legislative body. He loved this institution of the people's House, and his exemplary energy as a legislator will continue to honor this body and to inspire those who were privileged to serve with him.

The American educator Horace Mann once said, "Be ashamed to die until you have won some victory for humanity." By any definition, CARL PERKINS was not only a winner but a great champion, but the definition I like best, for its simple eloquence, is that of his dear friend and Kentucky colleague, BILL NATCHER: "CARL PERKINS was a good and kindly man whose delight in life was working for his district, his State, and his country."

I know I will continue to feel his presence any time we gather to celebrate life and its goodness its possibilities. And I can almost feel CARL whispering to me, especially on Derby Day! I thank the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS].

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, Mr. NATCHER, I was privileged to come to serve in this body in January 1963 and was assigned to the Committee on Education and Labor by the House.

It was there that I first met CARL PERKINS. I remember our first meeting; the offer for cooperation, the friendship which seemed sincere and friendly.

As I watched him work I realized I had found a great and true friend and a wonderful man.

Mr. PERKINS ultimately became the chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor.

When he took it over it was a very difficult task for him because the committee was in disarray and its staff had become dispirited.

But CARL PERKINS was a good leader. He organized the committee members, both Democrats and Republicans; he organized the staff and got it going again.

In his kindly but firm and determined manner he became a great leader in the education works of this Nation and of the world.

He believed in protecting the people who needed help. He believed in fighting for the people who shared the miseries that so many people of lesser financial means have.

He fought for the people in eastern Kentucky and as he fought for them he fought for all the poor people and disadvantaged people of the Nation.

He realized that education was the great hope of mankind and I believe he was inspired in this work not only by his love for education but by his great love and respect for his wife who was also a teacher.

He inspired me to try to do better in all of the things that I have been privileged to participate in here in the House. He was a skillful parliamentarian, he was a skillful bargainer, always keeping in mind that it was not so much in the winning but in the quality of the fight that you put up and what you stood for.

He stood for raising up America, for lifting its goals, for helping its downtrodden and its handicapped.

When word was released about his death, even though I live a thousand miles away from his district, I received a great many phone calls from concerned constituents of mine who had known or had been touched by CARL PERKINS, who had received something of an inspirational gift from him because of his concern.

□ 1810

The Nation is poorer for his passing, but all of us are richer for having associated with him.

I thank the gentleman.

A TRIBUTE TO THE HON. CARL D. PERKINS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SNYDER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, With the passing of CARL PERKINS, the Nation lost a great man, the House of Representatives lost an outstanding Member and I lost a very dear friend.

CARL was never much of a socializer. He didn't spend much time on the reception circuit. He didn't dine out a lot. But whenever the House was in late for an evening session, he would stop by the office and we would talk.

It didn't matter to him that my political affiliation was different than his. Not a bit.

It didn't matter to him that my political philosophy was different than his. Labels didn't mean much to CARL. We became close friends.

Sometimes we would just sit and watch the proceedings on the floor. Or we would try to find some country music show on the cable. Sometimes we would call up Bob Jones, the former chairman of Public Works, whom CARL and I both like a lot and we would chat with him in Scottsboro, AL. But most of the time we would just talk.

In those evening chats, I learned a lot. I learned a lot about how Congress works—because few people knew it any better than CARL PERKINS. In his 36 years of service, under eight Presidents there wasn't much CARL hadn't seen—and there wasn't anything that he had forgotten.

In those chats I also learned quite a bit about the history of the Seventh District of Kentucky. CARL had a fabulous memory and he never missed a detail.

And I got quite a geography lesson too. He knew every nook and cranny of the Seventh District—and there are a lot of nooks and crannies in the Seventh District. But he knew them because he had been out in his old "Galaxie" as he called it and driven every inch of that district countless times. He knew the people. He knew their names. And he knew their sons and their daughters. And he loved to talk about them.

You didn't have to sit through many of these office chats to learn one thing about CARL PERKINS and that was that his love of his native State and his love of her people dominated most of his thought.

That's probably why he didn't care much about labels. His was not a philosophy hammered out of the stone of political dogma—His was a philosophy of the heart.

He knew his district. He knew his people and he cared.

It was that love—that compassion for "his" people—the people of Knott County—the people of Kentucky—and just people in general—that motivated CARL. That and a great faith in the ability of the Federal Government to solve the problems of those people, if it sets its mind to do it.

And that is exactly what he set his mind to do—36 years ago and the legislative record he achieved in those 36 years is one that will be hard to ever match again.

Education, agriculture programs, health and safety programs. He had a hand in weaving just about every piece of legislation that we now call the safety net, all of it was motivated by that deeply felt concern for "his people."

Because of that compassion and his singleminded persistence. Because of his patience and hard work, millions of Americans have been educated. Millions have been trained for jobs. Millions have received health care that they might not have received otherwise. In fact, his compassion has touched the life of virtually every American in some way and made those lives a little brighter.

Of course, compassion alone cannot explain his accomplishments. He also had great ability. Because of his rambling country boy walk and drawling down home talk, many people would doubt it and underestimate him—once. Never twice. Once you had seen him in action, you knew that CARL PERKINS knew the ropes, knew the rules and knew how to use them both.

CARL never believed in pretense. He didn't get into Gucci loafers or fancy suits just because he had been in the big city of Washington for so many years. Those things didn't matter to him. In 36 years, a good many fads and trends came and went but they didn't affect him too much.

He didn't care whether he was in fashion or not. A rumpled suit and white socks were good enough for him. He said, his wife Verna, finally put her foot down and convinced him the white socks were out but he would often mention to me that it still seemed downright wasteful to have a whole drawer of white socks and not be able to wear them.

But these things were simply not important to him. All he cared about was getting the job done.

He had the same disdain for changing political trends. Like fashion—a good many political trends and fads came and went in his 36 years. But they didn't have any more affect on CARL than clothing styles. Like the rugged hills that he came from, changing times had little affect on CARL PERKINS.

He didn't care what the political "in thing to do" was each passing moment. He held a straight course, apologizing to no one for it, and did what his heart told him was right every step of the way.

He was like the man described by John Greenleaf Whittier when he wrote:

Formed on the good old plan a true and brave and downright honest man loathing pretense, he did with cheerful will what others talk of while their hands were still.

On Wednesday evening, August 1, 2 days before his death, the House of Representatives was in late. CARL PERKINS stopped by the office. He had been there the night before. He wasn't feeling well then. He had what he thought was "an awful cold." He could still muster a gleam in his eye and a big CARL PERKINS grin when you mentioned the equal access bill. He was still enjoying his victory on that battle.

But it was obvious that he felt terrible.

I suggested that he ought to get home and get some rest. He wouldn't have any of it. He said, "GENE, there's just so much to do."

Yes, we still have much to do but, I hope and pray that we never forget how much we have accomplished because CARL PERKINS was here.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. WATKINS].

Mr. WATKINS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentlemen from Kentucky [Mr. SNYDER and Mr. NATCHER] for having this special order.

My roots go deep in the hill country of the poverty area of southwest Arkansas, southeast Oklahoma. Mr. PERKINS was my kind of Congressman. Mr. PERKINS was a country Congressman who loved to represent his people. He was a Congressman of the soil of that hill country of Kentucky and his roots remain very, very deep there. I do not think any of his constituents ever doubted that.

I visited with him on the floor many times. First, I always enjoyed to visit and swapping stories about the hill country and also the problems and concerns and needs of constituents, like constituents, that maybe did not have as much as a lot of other people.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I learned at his knee. I listened and occasionally he would slap my knee and occasionally I would slap his. I learned a great deal.

The last time I visited with CARL PERKINS was the Thursday afternoon before his death. In fact, I kindly remarked, GENE, that I thought he kind of looked a little bad and he kind of looked at me with a strong look out of his eye that I thought first might have meant, "You young whippersnapper, why don't you just kind of mind your own business."

But, he said, "Well, you know I kind of got the croup or a cold, one."

I asked him he should go get him a syrup cloth for his chest, because we always talked about those old time remedies.

□ 1820

And the next morning, when I flew to Oklahoma, when I got off the plane in Oklahoma City, I was going to have to drive the hour and a half more on down to my district in rural Oklahoma, my staff member asked me if I had heard the news about CARL PERKINS, and he told me about the death of our friend and a man who has accomplished a great deal for this country.

There are two things that I would like to share that I learned: CARL PERKINS, I do not know whether he ever twisted anyone's arm, but he had a powerful grip, and he would just lead you down to the well or out to wherever he wanted to do a little counseling with you. He was a fighter for his folks, and you could look in his eye and you knew he was genuinely speaking from the heart about his concern and about the needs of his people. I shared a mutual problem of having a water project on the hit list, and he and I teamed up to try to make sure that Yatesville, as he said, "WATKINS, I have got a hole down there that needs to be filled up," and he would grab my arm and he would shake my arm and, let me assure you, I cast every vote that I could to help CARL PERKINS fill that hole up down at Yatesville on that particular water project.

Also, his personal love for the unfortunate. And when you really analyze and think about what our responsibilities and duties are that I think our Creator put us on Earth here to do, whether it is in this Congress or whether it is a minister, a teacher, a housewife, if I interpret the Scriptures correctly, it is try to help those who are less fortunate.

The second thing I remember of CARL PERKINS long ago is that he was recognized as the—and I underline

"the"—leader in America for vocational education.

Mr. Speaker, I am a product of vocational education. I would not be standing here today if it had not been for vocational education. I would not be standing here today if it had not been for vocational agriculture and a Future Farmers of America organization. And I know that there have been many hundreds of thousands of young men, and now women, who wear the blue and gold FFA Jacket who have had their lives molded and shaped because the FFA and vocational education was a tool that helped mold them as a product in their lives. They may not know it today, but as they sit in their giant corporations, or whether it is in the various leadership capacities around the world, they had their start because of a man, CARL PERKINS, who cared.

In the Good Book, in the Scripture, John, 15th chapter, 13th verse, it says the greatest gift of love that anyone can have is when they lay down their life for their friends and for others. I think CARL DEWEY PERKINS exemplified that Scripture, John 15:13. And I want to thank his family for sharing CARL PERKINS with all of us. I want them to know and his constituents to know that America is a lot better place for many young persons who grew up in the hill country and in poverty because he passed this way.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I thank him and Chairman NATCHER for arranging this special order to pay tribute to our very good friend, CARL PERKINS.

CARL PERKINS spent as much time in Congress as many years as I am old. And while I am sure the good Lord takes you when He is ready for you, He does not always take you when your friends are ready to have you leave.

One of the things I enjoyed about serving on the Education and Labor Committee with CARL PERKINS was that he was a teacher and you were able to sit and to watch and to listen and learn more than you could ever learn by any other means. And to watch CARL PERKINS in action is something that nobody else who comes to this body will ever be able to observe because he is gone. And we will be poorer for it.

The career of CARL PERKINS, as mentioned by previous speakers, is written across this land. It is written across this land in that the American public is so much better for his having been here. To me, CARL PERKINS embodied the best of what we like to believe a government should be, because he clearly understood that while the people of Kentucky were independent, while the people of Kentucky were tough and fearsome, he understood that there were things that had to be done that they could not do for themselves because they did not have the resources to do those things. He understood that a government could build bridges, a government could contain streams, a government could clean up the mines, a government could pay for the wrecked health of those individuals who mined the coal to turn the wheels of industry of this country and that those were debts that this Government had to its citizens and that were obligations that had to be met.

I do not think CARL really understood or cared about the fashion of politics that the gentleman from Kentucky has just mentioned, and that was when our party went through a little spat here with neoliberalism and those people who were trying to run away from the tenets of the Democratic Party and what they stood for, and I remember an article was written in the Washington Post suggesting perhaps that people like CARL PERKINS had become an anachronism, that they were not really relevant to this new political fashion, to this new political reform. And I remember telling a reporter, "Well, let's just see at the end of the term who has got all of the chips when it is time to get up from the table." And I dare say that tribute was paid by one of the Republican Senators who said that they were afraid to go to conference with CARL PERKINS because they were afraid they would go back to their office and find all the furniture was gone.

Many, many people sat down to play poker with CARL PERKINS; very few got up with any chips. I had the privilege of attending those all-night conference sessions while he would wait them out and while he would wait for them to come around to his point of view. I think it was a tribute to conviction, because those convictions were so strongly rooted they would not be swayed by public opinion polls, they would not be swayed by the popularity or the gimmickry, they were rooted in the belief about the Government and about the people which that Government served.

I think it was rather interesting, when this administration came to town and many people ran for cover, CARL PERKINS said, "No, let's invite them up to the committee." And he was famous for very, very long hearings, maybe 3, 4 days on a particular subject. He would say, "Let's invite them all up here." Well, of course, that meant that somebody had to sit there all day. Well, CARL PERKINS would sit there, and he would have the cabinet secretary, the assistant secretary and the assistant to the assistant secretary, and all of the organizations, to talk about the ideas of this administration. He would lean over and he would grab your elbow and he would say, "Now, we are going to sit here as long as they want to talk, but we are not going to do a thing they want." And that was kind of the way it was, because he did not believe in what they wanted to do. He believed in the Government that understood the plight of the unfortunate. As the gentleman from Kentucky has said, what has become known as the safety net is the tribute that will go on to protect American citizens long, long after CARL PERKINS has left this Congress.

I also think that there is another side that we all enjoyed, and that was the friendship between CARL PERKINS and BILL NATCHER. Again, as a young Member of Congress, and up until CARL's death, I used to try to get to the lunch room on time so I could sit at that table where inevitably BILL NATCHER would stir up trouble by telling a story on CARL PERKINS. No matter how often that story was told, CARL would start to say, "Now, BILL NATCHER, don't go telling that story." Pretty soon that story would come out, and there would be people there who perhaps had not heard it before, and the laughter and the friendship was a part of, I guess what makes this a great institution for those of us who are privileged to serve here and fortunate enough to serve here. But that kind of friendship is not often shared with so many others to their enrichment, and we will clearly miss that.

Lastly, many people have commented on CARL's strong grip when he grabbed hold of you and he told you that you were going to walk along with him, because he would never use the underground subway that connects the office buildings here. I think I was here 4 terms before I found out that tram. I thought you had to walk with CARL PERKINS from time to time. But I will tell you again that in that short journey you could find out more about what was going to happen in the Education and Labor Committee and what was not going to happen in the Education and Labor Committee. While we had some disagreements on legislation from time to time, when I did, I would always go overground so I would not run into the chairman in the tramway there, because I was afraid that he would change my mind immediately.

We are going to miss him, but we will never forget him because I am not sure that there will be others to replace that style or that conviction. It is difficult in this day and age to stand as fast as CARL PERKINS did. But I will say that there is no tribute, there are no words that we can utter here today that will outshine what CARL PERKINS accomplished. It is a debt of all Americans because whether they know it or not, they have all been touched by his actions in this legislative body to try to better society in this country and to better the lives of those who perhaps did not get out of the starting block with the same speed as other.

It was a rare opportunity, it was a joyous opportunity, I only wish sometimes perhaps that I had taken his invitation to join the gentleman from Kentucky in his office in those late night sessions. I heard about those phone calls to Bob Jones, but I wish that sometime I had been there, because this was a wonderful man who I simply, there is no way that you can talk about CARL PERKINS without a smile coming to your face. I would expect as we reminisce around here among his friends, the laughter and the knee slapping and the stories will continue on until clearly those who come here after all of us will remember the name of CARL PERKINS.

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I thank my colleague from Kentucky, as well as our distinguished chairman, Mr. NATCHER, your colleague from Kentucky, for this opportunity to evoke the memory of CARL PERKINS. He was certainly a great Congressman and a great American who has been called to death's dateless night.

It seems strange to be here evoking that memory. It just seems as if CARL PERKINS is still among us. Those of us that had worked with CARL, had been blessed with his friendship, I think share that feeling that death really has very little meaning when it comes to the case of a CARL PERKINS. His spirit certainly hovers here even now. Even in this area where you, the distinguished Members from Kentucky, and some of us would congregate during a rollcall or during a heated debate.

When we do evoke, reverentially, the memory of this great American, I think one must stress the fact that CARL PERKINS was a wise man to know, and very bold to perform. Here was a man that over the span of three decades served his constituents; upheld his sworn oath of office faithfully, honorably, and most effectively. At the same time, he transcended that purely local, parochial responsibility and served every single nook and cranny of this Nation who had any kind of education need.

I, for one, for instance, must give testimony to the debt we have to CARL PERKINS in our areas. We have great dependency on those very programs that CARL PERKINS initiated, authored and worked desperately hard over a period of 30 years to erect and construct as national policy.

I say he is bold to perform because in the fact of very adamant challenge and opposition and determined effort to undo those 30 years of labor with the current attacks on those programs that the Congress had in its wisdom enacted as national policy, CARL PERKINS, even despite those odds, bold to perform, efficient in that boldness, safeguarded, preserved, and we continue to transmit those programs. Even against those odds.

I think that in my case, I must go back to the point in time when I arrived on the scene as a Member of the House of Representatives in midterm of the 87th Congress. I was most anxious to gain a seat on the Education and Labor Committee. Even though political pressures were great, and great political issues were raised about the fact that I should seek membership on the Armed Services Committee, given the nature of the stake in defense that my district has. But I could not there, and I could not on the Labor and Education Committee for the plain and simple reason that the chairman then, Adam Clayton Powell, refused adamantly to accept any kind of new addition to the committee.

That is how I met CARL PERKINS; he was then one of the higher ranking members of the committee. I met him here on the floor when he came and introduced himself. He admitted that he had knowledge of the fact that there was some pressure to have me join that committee. He expressed his willingness to do anything he could to help. I explained to him that I did not work that way. I had had the privilege of serving 5 years in the State Senate of Texas, and I knew and was respectful of the precedents, the rules, written and unwritten, seniority and the like.

The Speaker called me and asked me if I would force the issue. That he could, with the help of the Texas colleagues, since Texas did not, and for many years has not had a Member on the Education and Labor Committee, and again, I said no. But CARL PERKINS came to me and he said something that I will never forget. He said, "Young man," even though I came here at the age of about 44, he still called me a young man, he said, "you know, you are a long-distance runner, aren't you?" He said, "You are very wise. Had you made an issue, you would not only have antagonized your own colleagues in the Texas delegation, but you would have found it a little difficult, even in the new assignment to this committee."

The truth of the matter was that I was lucky even at that. For there were three of us sworn in simultaneously at that midterm point. Lucien Nedzi from Detroit; Joe Wagner from Louisiana. Of the three of us, I was the only one that obtained an assignment to a full standing committee, which was the Banking Committee, because in the meanwhile, the ranking member then from Texas, Wright Patman, interceded. He did so after he had conversed with CARL PERKINS. So that is the history of my present committee assignment.

Had I indicated, the fact is that CARL PERKINS assured me that he would have done everything in his power, and I think at that time, though he was not the immediate ranking member, if I recall correctly, it was considerable. Ever since then, and after many, many occasions of importuning him on behalf of the district, on behalf of adjacent and neighborly school districts, and his coming through on basic programs, there is no way that the RECORD could show the depth of feeling of gratitude, the high respect, the warm feeling of affection that one has for CARL PERKINS, and that many, many educators in my district, upon knowledge that he had passed, called to express. I would like the RECORD to show that I am speaking also for the many, many voices of very, very impressive pedagogues, educators, and leaders in Texas, in my area and out that forever will have enshrined in their hearts the memory and affection for CARL PERKINS.

Politics and fame in politics is transitory at best. Our foot prints are on sand.

But the real memories, I think, are reflected in the case of CARL PERKINS and what Chairman NATCHER told me upon his return from the funeral services in which he reported the outpouring of expression from neighbors and others in Kentucky.

I think the monument in the hearts of constituents living and dead and the monuments in our hearts, those still remaining will be there, of course, the length and extension of our lives. But CARL's contribution as a legislator, faithful first in his trust to his own district reflected nationally is most permanent and I conclude as I started by thanking the two gentlemen from Kentucky for giving us this chance to place into the RECORD our feelings and our thinking about CARL PERKINS.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, it is with a heavy heart that I pay tribute today to one of the giants of the U.S. House of Representatives, my friend and long-time colleague, CARL D. PERKINS of Kentucky.

CARL PERKINS was elected to Congress in 1948 and served with great wisdom for 36 years. A strong believer in the ideals of the Democratic Party, he was a compassionate legislator who saw an active and vital role for Government in improving the quality of life for those in his Kentucky district and for the people of this Nation. A champion of quality public education, CARL PERKINS strove to improve our Nation's educational system so that all of America's children might reach their education potential. As the Chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor, he was the guiding force behind a number of landmark education and child nutrition bills during the 1960's and 1970's. He knew the intimate details of the bills before his committee and fought bravely to protect crucial education and social programs from the budgetary knife.

He also worked diligently to protect the health and safety of the many families in his district whose livelihoods depended upon the coal mines. The people of Kentucky have lost a dedicated and very talented public servant.

Countless schoolchildren owe their education and knowledge to this man of vision. I will miss his wisdom, his knowledge and his down-home humor. I extend my most sincere sympathies to his family and to the people of Kentucky's Seventh Congressional District.

Mr. SNYDER. I thank the gentleman, and yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE].

Mr. PICKLE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, if there has ever been a Member who came to Congress and remained the same person in spite of all the pomp and the prestige and the honor bestowed on him as a Member of Congress, it was CARL PERKINS.

After 35 years, CARL PERKINS was absolutely the same down-to-earth, hard-driving, hard-working, unpretentious man who never forgot the average citizen he represented, many of whom were hard-pressed workers in Kentucky.

As chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, his influence was keenly felt in the legislation on education, labor, health and the environment and the other great issues of our time. It is no understatement to say that every piece of social legislation passed over the last 25 years has a strong influence of CARL PERKINS imprinted upon it.

He was far-seeing, kind, loveable but he was as tenacious as a bulldog. CARL just kept advancing good legislation and he never let anyone come up for air until he had passed the bill. If we ever had a man who came from the common people, it was CARL PERKINS.

Now, from a personal standpoint, Mr. Speaker, I am in debt to CARL PERKINS for the help he gave me in my district in maintaining the Gary Job Corps Program in my district.

Whenever a problem arose, CARL PERKINS came roaring out of the mountains of Kentucky and in a defiant manner, and he challenged anybody that stood in his way that wanted to change that program.

I remember one time the Gary Job Corps was threatened in my district. The administration at that time had indicated they wanted to cut back on it and they were going to either reduce it or maybe eliminate the job corps program.

That got the ire of Mr. CARL PERKINS worked up and he let them know in no uncertain terms that if they attempted to do that he was going to call them here to the Hill and he was going to have hearings from now until Doomsday and he was going to make them eat every word they ever said against this program.

And I thought he stated himself very clearly but before we could even clear your throat, he started in on them again. And about the third or fourth time he was shouting so loud that they literally ran for cover, trying to get out the door and get away from CARL.

Well, he was that kind of individual. If he was for you and with you and believed in your program, he stood up and fought for you just as he did for the people in his district. He was not a gentleman. He was very blunt and very straightforward. If he wanted your attention, he would grab you on the floor by the elbow and it was not just a nudge; a little grip to say that I want to chat with you. He would grab your elbow in a vice and he would hold you and he would literally steer you in a chair and he would hold you there until he could talk to you, until you finally agreed that you would help him.

I can still feel the grip on my elbow now, on any matter that he was interested in, because he was determined that he would get your attention and determined in some way to help people.

Well, we have lost a great friend and a great man. If a person can say that he was part of our times, CARL PERKINS was a vital part of the times of the last 30 years in this country.

He made a great influence on this country and his influence will be felt for years and years and years, and we are better people because the Lord sent us a good man like CARL PERKINS.

I personally am indebted to this good and thoughtful man for his tireless efforts, a man who left his good will imprinted on the hearts and minds of our Nation. CARL PERKINS is a man who's life did make a difference—not just for his constituents, but for everybody.

Mr. ANDERSON. Would the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ANDERSON. I thank the gentleman [Mr. SNYDER] for yielding, and Mr. Speaker, I don't think it is any exaggeration on my part to say that no congressional district in the United States has been as well served during the last 36 years as the Seventh District of Kentucky. CARL PERKINS was born, raised, and recently laid to rest in the same small town in eastern Kentucky that he lived in all his life. He was truly one of this State's favorite sons and one of this Assembly's most effective and honored Members.

Having been elected to the House of Representatives in 1948 after serving with distinction on the front lines in World War II, CARL PERKINS saw the history of post-war America unfold from the privileged vantage point of Capitol Hill. More importantly, he took a leading hand in shaping our future. He served in this Chamber during the Korean conflict, the McCarthy hearings, and when the Supreme Court made its historic ruling in Brown against Topeka Board of Education that segregation in our public schools is unconstitutional. This historic decision marked the beginning of the modern era of American education, so much of which our departed colleague has personally shaped.

He was one of only 11 Southern Democrats in the House to vote for the Civil Rights Act of 1964. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Elementary and Secondary Education, he authored the Elementary and Secondary Education Act and pushed it to the House floor. After 3 weeks of hard work his unprecedented bill was signed into law by President Johnson. In 1967 he ascended to the chairmanship of the Committee on Education and Labor, a year before I joined the ranks of U.S. Congressmen.

In the intervening 16 years, I have seen CARL steer through the House a mind-boggling amount of major legislation to help protect the workers and educate the children of this Nation. I am proud to be able to stand here today and say that I had the opportunity to support such landmark legislation as the Occupational Safety and Health Act, the Older Americans Act, the Higher Education Act, the Vocational Education Act, the Employee Retirement Income and Security Act, and others. All of these precedent-setting initiatives trace their beginnings to our departed friend.

It may be redundant to say that CARL PERKINS was a great friend of the rank-and-file American but I am saying it anyway. His departure has left a tremendous vacancy that we will have to work together to fill. I am honored to have been a friend and colleague of CARL's. He will be sorely missed here, in Kentucky, and across the country.

● Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I can't think of anything I could say which would increase the high regard that all Members of Congress had for the late CARL PERKINS.

We are all familiar with his strong leadership and his dedication to legislation to make life better for our middle- and low-income citizens.

Sometimes one is more impressed with the little things than with the great activities of an individual. Some years ago while serving as chairman of the House Subcommittee on Tobacco, I conducted field hearings in Lexington, KY, and after the hearings had begun, in comes my friend CARL with some 15 or 20 constituents of his, and he seated himself in the audience with his constituents. I interrupted the proceedings to invite Chairman PERKINS to come to the platform and sit with the other Members of Congress. He thanked me very much, but said he much preferred to sit with his own people.

This devotion to his constituents made it possible for him to serve more than 35 years in the U.S. House of Representatives. His strength and leadership will be sorely missed. To his family, I share with them a sense of loss and feel privileged to have served some 18 years with a man of his caliber. ●

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, the death of CARL PERKINS took from us a kind and generous man and one of the most masterful legislators of this century.

It was an honor and a privilege to work closely with him over the years in the enactment of many, many laws in the areas of civil rights, social welfare, education, and labor. These laws will remain forever his legacy not only to the poor people of his district in the heart of Appalachia but to all Americans who seek a leg up from an active and compassionate government.

CARL PERKINS was a caring man, and his quiet demeanor gave small indication of the fervor inside him as he brought about enactment of some of the most important legislation of the last quarter century. The laws he shepherded through the Congress in such areas as health, education, food, job training, and worker safety are testament to his skill as legislator, politician, and parliamentarian; to the great affection and high regard he had for working men and women, and to his abiding concern for their well-being and that of their children.

Although he was a Member of Congress for more than three decades, CARL PERKINS never forgot or lost touch with his background or the people in it.

He visited his rural Kentucky district often, and it was on such a visit that he died—denied the chance to see his beloved hills and their people one more time.

CARL PERKINS and I had been friends and allies almost from that day we arrived in Congress together more than 35 years ago. He came to this body as a country teacher, a country lawyer. I shall remember him as a leader with heart, a counselor of wisdom and sympathy, a staunch ally, and a valued friend. Through his triumphant years and those sad, recent times, when he saw so much that he fought for decimated, he was a wonderful, warm human being. His passing is a great loss to his legion of friends and admirers, his colleagues in this body, and to the Nation.

We shall miss him.●

● Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in tribute to the life and service of our departed colleague and friend, CARL DEWEY PERKINS, whose unwavering dedication and personal integrity earned him a place of honor among the greatest of those who served in the U.S. House of Representatives.

While we must mourn the passing of a valued legislative craftsman of historic proportions, we gratefully celebrate his life's work as a faithful, tireless, productive public servant and true representative of those he affectionately accepted as his people.

In a career which spanned more than three decades, CARL PERKINS never lost touch with the needs and aspirations of his beloved eastern Kentucky constituents.

Yet his vision extended far beyond a home district and State to encompass the cares and concerns of an entire Nation. His faith in that Nation and his compassionate understanding of America's fundamental commitment to public education and equal opportunity were the inspiration of his passionate, relentless support of those causes.

Our colleague was both a pilgrim and pioneer whose efforts as a Member of this House touched and brightened the lives of millions now living and yet unborn who may never know of the useful life and revered name of CARL D. PERKINS.

It is enough, however, that we who remain after him today dedicate ourselves to keeping alive the spark of hope he kindled in the hearts of the disadvantaged and downtrodden that they, too, might attain freedom's fullest blessings.●

● Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, we all share the grief over the loss of Representative CARL PERKINS. A public servant of the highest order, CARL PERKINS will be remembered by working men and women, students, the elderly, and the humble throughout the Nation as a person of compassion and warmth, a champion of labor, a friend of education, and a leader among those who would extend a hand and heart to uplift all sectors of humanity.

As a veteran of 35 years in Congress, and the dean of the Kentucky delegation, Representative PERKINS chaired the Education and Labor Committee since 1967 at a time when President Lyndon Johnson and the Nation called upon his wisdom and skill to advance the most far-reaching social legislation since the New Deal.

Not only did CARL PERKINS answer that call with an enthusiasm and commitment that persisted throughout his life, but he counted among his major successes other great social measures including the Vocational Education Act of 1963, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, and the black-lung benefits in the Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969. Some will remember CARL PERKINS for his struggle for school lunch programs, the aid to crippled children, and the Federal aid to schools. Others will recall his name in efforts to establish assistance to college students, or nutrition programs for needy youth.

In addition to all those awards, I remember him simply as a great human being who would not sit by, as Edmund Burke warned the good people of his day, and let evil prevail by doing nothing. I remember his warmth and his smile, and I am happy to have shared the same space with the gentleman from Kentucky who in his quiet way has made our world a better place to live in.●

● Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Kentucky, my colleague and good friend Mr. NATCHER, for holding this special order so that those of us who knew and loved CARL PERKINS could say a few words in his memory.

Mr. Speaker, I know I speak for many on my side of the aisle when I say that CARL PERKINS was not only an outstanding lawmaker, but, more importantly, he was also a caring and warm human being. Here was a man who cared deeply about his people and his call to their service. From humble beginnings in the hills of eastern Kentucky, CARL PERKINS became a giant in the Halls of Congress.

CARL's imprint on national issues, particularly education, will be a lasting one. But he was also an able and articulate spokesman for coal, an issue which ties our two districts together and which is of primary importance to our State.

From the days when he was young, CARL spent countless days, weeks, and months out on the road, visiting with his constituents and working to help them pull themselves out of the poverty which still lingers today in Appalachia. This close personal contact with his people was a matter of great pride to CARL, and the rest of us can only try to emulate his willingness to devote nearly all his time to the personal problems of his people.

For over three decades, CARL PERKINS' deep sense of commitment, his total honesty, his dedication to his people and their welfare, and his tireless work on behalf of America has been a shining beacon for this House.

On a personal note, I want to also speak briefly about CARL PERKINS the man: Someone who I counted as a good friend, who shared our love for Kentucky and our Nation. I recall those events back home which we shared in our adjoining districts—many in bad weather and outdoors. CARL never let the elements, or anything for that matter, stand between him and his people. They adored him, and he them. He never left his roots in Hindman, KY, where he was born, lived, and worked; and was laid to rest.

The great poet perhaps said it best when he wrote:

He walked with kings, nor lost the common touch.

I think that says it all about CARL, about his love for his people, and about the hard work and dedication which he gave to his people and to the Congress.

All of us feel the loss of CARL PERKINS. His contributions to education, to the less fortunate, and to our Nation will long be remembered by those of us who had the honor and privilege to work beside him.

In his memory, I would hope that all of us will rededicate ourselves to the continuation of the high standards which CARL PERKINS set for this Congress. Our hearts go out to his wife and family at their loss. Yet even as we speak here today, you can still feel CARL's presence among us.

His spirit will live on in our hearts and in these Halls and in those Kentucky hills for many, many years to come.●

● Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, last week, the schoolchildren in south Texas lost a great friend, one who has had a major influence on their lives; our friend and respected colleague, chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, CARL PERKINS. While those of us who had the pleasure to know him and work with him will miss Chairman PERKINS, it is for the youth of the country that I am saddened.

I doubt there are more than a handful of men and women under the age of 30 who have not directly or indirectly benefited from Chairman PERKINS' efforts in this body. Wherever students enrolled in a Head Start, took advantage of school lunch programs, or were able to pursue a college education with student loans or grants, we see the hand of CARL PERKINS. Few among us could ever dream of having such a positive and lasting impact on our Nation.

Many of us speak about the "American dream," but CARL PERKINS dedicated his life to providing young people the means of pursuing it on their own. Untold numbers of young people were the first in their family to complete a high school education, or obtain a college degree because CARL PERKINS helped provide the tools they needed.

While others may worry about the deindustrialization of the United States and its need to be competitive in world markets, proposing new tax policies, trade policies, or even industrial policies, CARL PERKINS knew that education is key. Machines may wear out or become obsolete, and ore deposits may be exhausted, but more important than all, our greatest resource, is our people. Chairman PERKINS knew that as long as we invested in our people, new and better machines would be built. It is a lesson we should all remember.

A number of my constituents in south Texas had the pleasure of meeting CARL PERKINS, or testified before him on education issues. I wish many more of my constituents and people throughout the country had had the opportunity to meet this great man for they too would be saddened by his death. On behalf of the people of the 15th Congressional District of Texas I extend condolences to his wife, Verna, his son Carl Christopher, to all his family and friends, to the people of the 7th District of Kentucky, and to the Nation. We have lost a leader and good friend to us all. ●

● Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the death last week of our friend and colleague CARL PERKINS is a deep loss to all Americans and especially to those who cherish fairness and opportunity.

For the better part of two decades Mr. PERKINS served as chairman of the Education and Labor Committee. And from my point of view, as one who had the good fortune to work with him on that committee for most of his chairmanship, I don't think it was ever served so well.

We all knew Mr. PERKINS as a skillful representative who deftly brought legislation before us. We admired these skills, but I, for one, more admired his abiding concern for the people of this land. I never knew him as anything but a gentleman who cared deeply about his country and the welfare of its people.

Even when it was unpopular to do so, he remained an unwavering champion of social legislation ranging from job training to school lunches. During the past 3 years he devoted his enormous energies to protecting programs for education assistance, employment, and child nutrition from reckless budget cuts.

In his heart he understood that Americans from disadvantaged families could share in our Nation's economic progress only through education. And he made the goal of equal educational opportunity a personal crusade.

He was, as well, a steadfast friend of working men and women, convinced that they are the source of America's greatness.

He understood the ravages of poverty because he was from a poor area of eastern Kentucky where both jobs and educational opportunities were often scarce. Even though he spent 33 years in this body and was the dean of his State's delegation, he never forgot his own origins or the people he represented.

He never lost touch with his people. And he did it the old-fashioned way, getting out to meet with them whenever he could at their homes, in stores, and around the countryside of his rural district.

When he died he was flying home.

His death is indeed a great loss. Men of his skill, style, and compassion come this way all too infrequently. ●

● Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, despite his quiet demeanor and soft-spoken delivery, CARL PERKINS was among the brightest and most effective legislators with whom I have had the privilege of serving in this body.

All his life he had one agenda: to defend the oppressed and poor in Kentucky and our Nation. Because he knew what he wanted, and most importantly, knew how to achieve it, he was most tenacious and successful in protecting his position, particularly in conference committee meetings with the other body.

His achievements in increasing the education level of all Americans are far too numerous to list. While he represented a district which is primarily rural, the education programs he advocated have brought greater opportunities to children in all parts of our country, from the hills of Appalachia to the streets of New York and Chicago.

I am certain my colleagues will agree that CARL PERKINS worked so hard and achieved so much that he must be ranked with President Lyndon Johnson as one of the most important public figures in this century to provide quality education to America's youth.

As we in Congress search for ways to ensure that our Nation's educational needs are met fully, I know that that quest will be all the more difficult without the guidance and wisdom of CARL PERKINS. ●

● Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to participate today, with so many of my colleagues, in this tribute to the late CARL PERKINS.

He was a fixture on Capitol Hill, having served here since 1949. CARL PERKINS never forgot his Kentucky roots and worked for the people of the Seventh District with distinction.

As chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, CARL PERKINS was a driving force behind so many pieces of legislation over the past two decades and his pleasant manner won the respect of Members on both sides of the aisles, as evidenced by the fact that so many of his colleagues took the time to attend his funeral.

I know the people of Kentucky, who had come to count on his leadership over these years, will miss CARL PERKINS. He will certainly be missed here on Capitol Hill as well. ●

● Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, I take great pride today in rising to join my colleagues in commemorating the memory of our dear friend, the Honorable CARL D. PERKINS of Kentucky.

For 35 years CARL PERKINS served with distinction and honor in this great body and his achievements during that period of time are legendary. Perhaps no other man in recent congressional history has been more responsible for advancing our Nation's educational programs than CARL PERKINS.

His work as chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, a post he held since 1967, and as chairman of the Subcommittee on Elementary, Secondary and Vocational Education, insured that millions of Americans would have the opportunity to receive an education.

Among the legislation that he developed and led through the political process were bills dealing with job training and school lunch programs, remedial education for the disadvantaged, vocational education, school libraries, child care, and nutrition, adult education and math and science education programs.

His crowning achievement, the landmark Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, benefited the lives of millions of American school children. And think of millions of others who received a school lunch, perhaps their only hot meal of the day thanks to CARL PERKINS.

Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that his achievements have affected the lives of nearly every American, the fact of the matter is that CARL was not very well known outside the House and his beloved Kentucky congressional district.

If ever a man truly fit the job description of "Representative" it was CARL PERKINS. Rather than seeking national news coverage for his outstanding achievements in the field of education and aid to the rural parts of our Nation, CARL was more interested in returning home each weekend to the little town of Hindman, KY, where he could sit down with his constituents and find out how they were doing and what he could do to make their lives a little better. No problem in Appalachian Kentucky was too small for him to pay attention to, for he was truly one of the people he served.

He knew that the coal miner in Pike County, KY, had the same problems as the poorly paid farm workers in southern California and that both needed the on-the-job health protection that only Federal legislation could provide.

We have lost both a dear friend and a great leader. Our best wishes go out to CARL's wife Verna and the other members of the Perkins family.

They can rest assured that the legacy that CARL PERKINS left us will never be forgotten. It is my prayer that his memory will inspire us as we move toward solving the enormous problems facing our great Nation.●

● Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, CARL PERKINS and I were both elected to this House in 1948 and he was my dear friend for all of those years. I will miss him very much and the entire House, which he served with endless dedication and rare legislative skill, will miss him, but it will be the people of his district and people like them everywhere who will miss him the most.

CARL PERKINS was their champion. He understood in the most fundamental way that this country is stronger, safer, and richer when the policies and resources of the Government are utilized to assist those who need the help and opportunities that an enlightened Government can provide. His was a practical and humane approach to Government that was as fair and decent as the man himself. CARL PERKINS believed in what he was doing and he was right. It saddens me that we will not have the opportunity to work together again and I can say that I am proud to have known CARL PERKINS and to have served with him. I extend my most sincere condolences to Mrs. Perkins and to all of his family.●

● Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, the death of Congressman CARL D. PERKINS was a tremendous loss for the people of our country and the Members of this House.

CARL PERKINS came to Congress in 1949 as a representative of the people of eastern Kentucky. He never lost sight of the needs of the people who sent him to Washington, but in his 35 years in the House of Representatives he assumed a much broader constituency. The people whose cause he championed were the people in need in our society; the poor, the undereducated, the sick, and those who worked in unsafe conditions. He worked for their interests tirelessly and effectively, not in a way which sought publicity but in a way which focused on results. His ability to persuade was legendary in the Halls of Congress, and his skill as a legislator was well known and appreciated far beyond Capitol Hill.

It is impossible to estimate how many lives were positively affected by the work of CARL PERKINS. The Vocational Education Act of 1963, the Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969, and the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 were shaped by his hand and they have eased the burden of, and expanded opportunities for millions of Americans. His legacy is one of commitment to the ideals on which this country was founded and his career is a testament to the things Government can do for its people, rather than to its people.

I want to express my deepest sympathies to CARL's wife, Verna, his son Chris, and the other members of his family. I hope that in the days ahead their sorrow will be lessened by the knowledge that the contributions made by CARL PERKINS to the quality of life in this country will never be forgotten.●

● Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues today to pay tribute to the Honorable CARL PERKINS, a champion of people young and old—children, working men and women, senior citizens, and all who needed a tireless leader to work on their behalf.

CARL PERKINS was committed to making our country a better place in which to live and a true land of opportunity. His legislative guidance in the areas of education, labor, and welfare have brought our Nation closer to the ideal he envisioned.

I feel deeply privileged to have had the opportunity of knowing and working with Congressman PERKINS. He is one of those rare persons of whom it can be said: "he leaves our world a better place than he found it."

He will be deeply missed.●

● Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, it is with a deep sense of sadness and loss that I join my colleagues in honoring our respected colleague, CARL PERKINS.

All of us who had the opportunity to serve with Chairman PERKINS will always remember it as a true learning experience in shrewd and aggressive lawmaking. CARL PERKINS believed deeply in the Government's obligation to help the helpless, and throughout his 18 terms in the House of Representatives, he remained dedicated to the expansion of human dignity and equal opportunity. He never stepped back, never accepted defeat, never gave up, and never abandoned his principals or his commitment.

As a result, countless measures to enhance the social welfare bear Chairman PERKINS' imprint. He impressed his colleagues not only with his extraordinary tenacity, but also with his real compassion for our Nation's disadvantaged. He truly cared about people as individuals, and in caring about them, he took the trouble to understand them, to know their problems, and to do everything he could to help them.

Throughout this Congress, the State of Kentucky, and the Nation, there are many thousands of people who know what CARL PERKINS did for them, and they will never forget him. There are many millions more, though, who have benefited from his life's work without even knowing it, perhaps without ever having heard of him. This is the true measure of his contribution to our Nation.

His leadership, courage, and commitment will be sorely missed by all who had the honor of working with him.●

● Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I deeply value the honor at this moment of paying tribute to our colleague and good friend, CARL DEWEY PERKINS.

Through dedication, diligence, and determination, CARL PERKINS set forth many efforts that resulted in great achievements. CARL PERKINS was a moving force behind the House Committee on Education and Labor where he forged the landmark Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 through his subcommittee, led a strong commitment of Federal support in the Vocational Education Act, and encouraged the cause that resulted in an expanded Federal role in child nutrition and school feeding programs.

In addition, CARL PERKINS became an active voice in the field of industrial safety. He sponsored the fight for passage of the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969 and managed the passage of the Occupational Safety and Health Act in 1970.

Few words can describe this prime architect of existing Federal social programs. We came to know CARL PERKINS as a leader in the poverty fight. His consistent voting record of social legislation in the House helped us to recognize his cause as one for the people. I am delighted to acknowledge his dedicated support of civil rights legislation which displays clearly that his struggle was dedicated to all people.

CARL PERKINS was not only involved in legislative measures. He was well known among his constituents in the Seventh District of Kentucky as he traveled and recognized the causes of his people. He was often present whenever a disaster struck, usually offering comfort and resources to those suffering.

These are only a few of his accomplishments and we shall not dwell upon them individually but recognize them as the results of an illustrious character of social legislation and a pioneer of merit. The passing of CARL PERKINS, marking the end of a dedicated 36 years in the U.S. House of Representatives, is a great loss for us all. However, spiritually these 36 years of dedication will not be forgotten because, as quoted by his son, "our tribute to his memory shall be a dedication to his cause."●

● Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join my colleagues in saluting the life and work of our friend CARL PERKINS who passed away on August 3.

Congressman PERKINS served with distinction in the House of Representatives since his election to the Congress in 1948. His death is loss to the people of his eastern Kentucky district, his family and we who worked with him here in the House.

Congressman PERKINS served as chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor since 1967 and he certainly made his mark on many important Federal programs under his committee's jurisdiction. But for me, my lasting impression of CARL PERKINS is that of a good and decent man who worked diligently for what he believed was in the best interest of the people he represented in the Congress.

I wish to extend to his entire family my sorrow at CARL's passing and my condolence and deep sympathy at this sad loss.●

● Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is with great respect that I join with my colleagues in paying tribute to our late friend and colleague, CARL PERKINS. He was truly a great man who made many contributions to this Nation yet never lost the unassuming manner that characterized his many years of service.

I know that his constituents will miss the hard work he put in for his district, but I also know that this Nation will greatly miss his work on behalf of education and the working people of this country. There are many young people today who have promise for a better future because of the programs he advocated and guided through this body.

There is no greater legacy that anyone can leave than to offer hope for a better tomorrow to the generations that follow after them. CARL PERKINS has done that through his unfailing advocacy of strong public education. For that, this Nation can be proud of his service and mournful of his absence.

It was with deep regret that I learned of the death of CARL PERKINS back in August. I extend to his family my deepest sympathy.●

● Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, for more than 35 years the people of the Seventh District of Kentucky sent to Washington one of the ablest and most progressive Congressmen ever to serve in the House of Representatives. CARL PERKINS, who came from one of the country's poorest and most isolated regions in the heart of Appalachia, became a leading authority and advocate of Federal educational and social programs that have changed the course of this Nation's history.

As chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, CARL was one of the major influences on the antipoverty programs of the 1960's. The educational assistance programs he sponsored changed the concept of education in America by giving students from every background educational opportunities beyond any previous generation's highest dreams. The school lunch and employment programs he created and strengthened have improved the lives of millions of Americans, from rural east Kentucky to urban west Los Angeles.

CARL's efforts in Congress were guided by principle, not the tides of political change. His vision for a better America which he brought with him from the hills of Kentucky remained constant throughout his career. During a conversation in 1981 when virtually every social, educational, and health program was under siege by the new administration, CARL told me that times may change, but principles do not, and that those who shared his broad view of America would prevail.

We all will miss CARL's brilliant leadership. He was a statesman, a model legislator, and an inspiration to us all.●

● Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I could not be present for the special order of the House honoring the late CARL D. PERKINS, the distinguished chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee and a Member of this body for 36 years. Unfortunately, this special order came on the day of my State's primary elections.

My absence is something I think CARL would understand. He knew politics, and was not reluctant to use the means at his disposal to get things done. As chairman, he made no secret of his goals and eagerness to reach them. And he got things done.

During his leadership of the Education and Labor Committee, he created a long and proud record of service and concrete results. He was certain of what he wanted to do, and wasted no time getting there.

On more than one occasion, we in the minority differed with his views and were soundly and quickly defeated in the committee. Good naturedly we would joke about the "Perkins Express," the locomotive that powered legislation through the committee on a remarkably smooth and fast track.

Now and then we all get a little cocky, and on occasion some of us thought we had CARL beaten, only to find we had overlooked some parliamentary procedure or the dozen proxies in his pocket. The Perkins Express rolled right over us.

But CARL PERKINS was too decent and kind a person to get too upset about such setbacks. And behind all of his actions, there was no question as to his motives. He seemed to have little use for personal gain, and a large devotion to the public good.

The Perkins Express is a long, crowded train. Its cars are filled with the less fortunate people of his district and our country; the disabled, the poor, the elderly, and the ill. And it is filled with our brightest hopes, the children who fill our classrooms from kindergarten through graduate school.

CARL PERKINS has left a legacy that is the envy of any Member of this body. His mark is on dozens of programs that serve Americans, from child nutrition to the Older Americans Act. His career was one of great achievement.

I was one of the many Members of Congress who traveled to CARL's district for his funeral. Most of us had never been to eastern Kentucky. Riding on the bus, I sensed that a lot of Members better understood CARL after seeing the land and people he represented. A bus ride is not a very scientific survey, but the signs of economic distress were everywhere. If before you had thought that black lung benefits or child nutrition programs were overgenerous, you could not help but understand why CARL PERKINS fought for every last penny.

Vermont and eastern Kentucky are a lot alike in many respects. Especially in northeastern Vermont, we have many of the same problems as those that faced CARL. The similarities of our districts made it even easier to respect his views and work with him. I will miss doing so. I have lost a good friend, as have the people of Kentucky, Vermont, and the Nation. His family and many friends have my condolences.●

● Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I was most saddened about the loss of Congressman CARL PERKINS. As chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, he was the chief proponent for the best of our Federal social programs.

During my first two terms the Education and Labor Committee, under the leadership of Congressman PERKINS, provided the best congressional training a new Member could receive.

CARL PERKINS was an outstanding example of unselfishness, integrity, dedication, and hard work. He was our best advocate for those most vulnerable and those less fortunate. He was always aware of and moved by the deprivations and sufferings of others.

In our congressional forest, a great tree has fallen.●

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, like so many of my colleagues in the House of Representatives, I was shocked at the untimely death of our distinguished colleague, the Honorable CARL D. PERKINS. His death is a tremendous loss to his constituents from the Seventh Congressional District of Kentucky, and to all people of this Nation.

CARL was a good friend of mine during the period we had served in Congress together. I am proud I had the honor to have worked with him, and I shall always cherish his wise counsel, advice, and good will. CARL PERKINS dedicated his life to public service, and throughout his career worked toward improving the quality of life for all working men and women. He graduated from the University of Louisville Law School, and began the practice of law in 1935. In 1941 and in 1945, he was elected to the office of Knott County attorney, and served in the Kentucky General Assembly and as counsel to the Kentucky Department of Highways. He also served our country with distinction in Europe during World War II.

Elected to the 81st Congress in 1948, CARL PERKINS served in the House of Representatives for 18 consecutive terms, and was dean of the Kentucky delegation. As a Member of Congress, he compiled an outstanding record of achievement, and was the architect of some of the most important social legislation passed during the last 25 years. The Vocational Education Act of 1963, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, and the Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969 to provide black lung benefits, all bear his mark. Serving as chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee since 1967, he handled the bulk of President Johnson's antipoverty legislation.

CARL PERKINS was a champion of social welfare programs, and as chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, he moved legislation through his committee to improve the quality of education, provide Federal college student loans and free school lunches, and he also initiated many labor reforms. He tirelessly worked to protect the interests of all working men and women, of the underprivileged, and the uneducated. Most recently, he passionately fought the many budget cut proposals which tore deeply into the worthwhile social programs he helped to create.

Born in the small Kentucky town of Hindman, CARL PERKINS ably represented his constituents in Congress for almost 36 years. He was a soft-spoken man, known for his fairness, honesty, and integrity. His dedication to the highest standards was an inspiration to his friends and fellow citizens, and he was highly respected as one of the ablest Members of the House. He will long be remembered by those of us who had the privilege to serve with him in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, CARL PERKINS was an outstanding American. He will be missed by both those whom he served and those who had the privilege of knowing him. Mrs. Annunzio and I extend our deepest sympathy to his wife, Verna, his son, Carl Christopher, and the other members of his family who survive him.●

● Mr. ERLNBORN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor the memory and legend of CARL DEWEY PERKINS in this Chamber, and the mark of this man on the scores of laws which bear his name and the imprint of his hand and his heart.

A trade publication, in writing of CARL's precipitous death on August 3, quoted me as referring to him as a "bulldog." Having worked with him for almost two decades on the Education and Labor Committee, where he served as chairman for 17 years, I believe I knew CARL well enough to know he would have felt it an honor to be likened to a bulldog.

A bulldog is usually a stubborn critter, and CARL was the most tenacious in the pursuit of his legislative objectives of any of the people with whom I have served and, perhaps, of any who have served in this House. That is why, or at least one of the reasons why, he was one of the most successful in achieving the goals in which he believed.

CARL was not only a legislator par excellence. He practiced what he preached, especially about the rights of minorities. In allowing the committee minority to manage their own funds, he was a rarity among committee chairmen.

CARL put forth a special effort to maintain a spirit of cooperation with the minority. Shortly after I became the ranking Republican on the Education and Labor Committee, I suggested to him that we reestablish the "Perkins-Quie Principle" regarding staff travel. He replied, " * * * in tribute to the expected harmony of this era, I would like to suggest a rechristening to be known as the 'Erlenborn-Perkins principle'."

I have no hesitation to predict that CARL PERKINS will go down in history as having played as great or greater role in education in this land of ours than any who have been known formally as educators. Members of this body need not be reminded that the stamp of his devoted, personal, pioneering, and persevering leadership can be found in every education program passed by Congress over the past 35 years.

Another of the memorable characteristics of CARL that I must touch upon is his love for his family and the people in the hills of Kentucky. The dean of his delegation said it best: "CARL PERKINS was a good and kindly man whose delight in life was working for his district, his State, and his country."

CARL must have known much delight in life. He worked tirelessly for all of them, as we—his colleagues, his office, and committee staff, both majority and minority—can attest.

Along with you, Mr. Speaker, CARL's loyal staff, and all who have served here during CARL's three and one-half decades in office, I feel fortunate to have been associated with him. His family can find much comfort in knowing that CARL DEWEY PERKINS' service in the House will live after him.●

● Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, we have yet to realize the extent of the loss to the advancement of education that follows the death of our sage and valued companion, CARL PERKINS, the veteran Kentucky legislator.

Perhaps CARL PERKINS' last legacy to a fruitful 20-year tenure as chair of the House Education and Labor Committee was his effort to bring us together in support of Federal funding for training and retraining schoolteachers in mathematics, science, computer education, and foreign languages.

No doubt, CARL PERKINS was a staunch believer in the cooperation and compromise that best represents our constitutional system. And he continually showed this from before the time of the enactment of the first major Federal programs to aid elementary and secondary schools, almost 20 years ago.

One only need look at his work on education legislation in the 1960's to see how today's policies on funding for education on the local, State, and Federal levels have evolved. And his influence on the lives of all school children is demonstrated every day, not only in our better schools, but even in the breakfast and lunch programs that feed our most needy youngsters.

For his district as well, CARL PERKINS was a crusader for those in need and a champion of the dispossessed. Kentucky's mine-oriented Seventh Congressional District, whose economy swings with coal demand, nonetheless was the fastest growing congressional district in the 1970's of all those in Kentucky.

Please join with me in recognizing CARL PERKINS' distinguished 33-year career as one of our most trusted and competent lawmakers in recent history. He will be missed.●

● Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I rise with so many of my colleagues to pay tribute today to one of the very special people who have walked these halls—our good friend CARL D. PERKINS.

CARL was a man who earned such respect and stature among his colleagues that we all addressed him as nothing other than "Mr. Chairman." But behind his back, we showed our deep and abiding affection for the man we really knew as "PAPPY PERKINS."

At his funeral, we stood under cloudy skies and watched hundreds and hundreds of ordinary people come in mourning and in sadness to pay tribute to man they loved so deeply. There was humanity, a sense of caring and commitment that day that stands as the model of all of the chairman's life.

No Member of Congress has ever worked harder, or more successfully for the people he loved and the values he honored.

As the Almanac of American Politics says of the chairman, on reason for his great success was his own strength of character. The almanac goes on to say of the chairman "far from fashionable, he is one of those old fashioned liberals—Sam Rayburn was another—who know their legislation cold, negotiate like master poker players, and refuse to compromise their principles."

We were all richer because of the chairman's old fashioned uncompromising devotion to principle. And the Nation will reap the fruits of his work for decades to come.

We all have our fond memories of the chairman. One memory I am glad I do not have is having to sit across from him in a conference committee. As we all know, the chairman was a tough negotiator. He just did not want to give up when he knew he was right.

And most of the time, he knew he was right and he was correct in that belief.

We will all miss the chairman. He was one of those rare men whose mark will last on this House and this Nation for years to come.

Thank you.●

● Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, the Congress of the United States, the Nation, and the people of the Seventh District of Kentucky have suffered a great loss in the death of our late and highly respected colleague, CARL D. PERKINS.

I, personally, feel a very special loss for since I first entered the Halls of Congress over 15 years ago, CARL and I had developed a long, profitable, and stimulating working relationship.

His life was a genuine profile in courage, the epitome of decency and integrity.

He came from one of our Nation's poorest constituencies, and though he gained and wielded great power in the Congress, he never lost the common touch.

CARL PERKINS was indeed a people's Representative and he exemplified the best of a public servant: Gentle, respectful, unassuming, thorough, a no-nonsense approach, and high commitment to the task at hand.

CARL did not talk compassion, he demonstrated it; he not only talked about the need for education as a passport, he was an unceasing advocate for it; he did not verbalize about civility and courtesy, he served as a living example of it in this Chamber and across the country; he not only talked about justice, he was the personification of it in his daily interaction with his colleagues and his constituency in the Seventh District of Kentucky; he not only talked about the need for economic justice, he was in the forefront working for legislation to provide full employment for our Nation's work force. He was a marvelous example of one who believes that a public office is indeed a public trust that should be used to enhance and ennoble human kind.

CARL PERKINS believed in Government as an advocate for the people. He transformed that belief into effective legislative service that benefited the 235 million who comprise our Nation. At all times, he strived to make Government an instrument for hope, opportunity, and justice for all.

If any Member of Congress could be said to personify what is in the best interest of public education in this Nation, then CARL PERKINS would be in the forefront.

For over 16 years as chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, with vigor, he stood for and fought for the children and youths enrolled in our public schools. Every major piece of education legislation, over the last 16 years, bore the imprint of CARL D. PERKINS. He was a strong, untiring advocate for our Nation's workers, and he was a leading proponent of the landmark workers' health and safety legislation of the late sixties and early seventies.

He worked inspirationally, long before it was fashionable, to assure all people access to all facets of the public education network.

Mr. Speaker, while I grieve the death of the distinguished chairman from the Seventh District of Kentucky, I also rejoice that I was privileged to work with such a remarkable and caring individual.

His passion for promoting educational opportunity, his concern for the workers of our Nation, his deep love and affection for this august body, his fondness for his constituents in the Seventh District, and above all his gentility and loving manner mark him a colleague extraordinaire.

We suffer an immeasurable loss because he no longer walks, talks, and works among us.

CARL PERKINS' works are monumental and pervasive. He was a modest and just man, and I am reminded of him when I think of the principles expressed by Longfellow in one of his poems: "Ah to build, to build! That is the noblest art of all the arts."

I bid farewell to a master builder, a gentleman, and an advocate of the improvement of the quality of life for all of our citizens.

I know that all of my colleagues in the House join me in expressing sincere condolences to his wife, his son, and other family members. May they find strength and peace in the days ahead.●

● Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, today we are paying homage to our late colleague, the Honorable CARL D. PERKINS of Kentucky, who, through 36 years in this Congress, devoted his entire energies to making life a little better for the people of this country.

CARL never claimed to be a great legislator; he never claimed to be a hero; but he was both a great legislator and a hero to people who didn't even know him.

It's no secret that CARL labored in anonymity, making great progress for America's coal miners, our schoolchildren, those who lived in rural areas, without drawing attention to himself.

CARL probably didn't care about fame or fortune. He was concerned with the well-being of Americans.

And that concern, that caring, can be seen in the important legislation he personally guided through the House Education and Labor Committee and directed through the House as a whole.

Billions of American schoolchildren have learned to read and to experience the joy of learning because of CARL'S efforts in passing the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, a measure that insured heavy concentration on developing reading skills for our disadvantaged children, enhanced school library services, and so forth.

Millions of American schoolchildren ate a hot lunch in our schools because CARL promoted and pushed through the school-lunch program.

Thousands of mineworkers and their families have been rescued from danger because of CARL'S work in passing mine health and safety legislation and measures to help those with black lung disease.

Untold numbers of American high school graduates have been able to attend college and receive their education because CARL PERKINS was instrumental in securing passage of student-aid programs that paid the way.

Hundreds of thousands in this Nation's rural areas have been able to experience the joy of reading because of CARL'S constant interest in providing special assistance to public libraries in the rural parts of America.

CARL'S contributions to America and its people are legendary, but are probably best known only by those of us who worked with him and, often in the face of overwhelming odds, passed those bills that made life for all Americans, but especially our forgotten Americans, a little bit better and broadened the opportunity for those disadvantaged to achieve a better life.

For 17 years, CARL chaired the House Education and Labor Committee and, even though he didn't receive the publicity for the tremendous successes of the committee in passing landmark legislation, we who worked with him day in and day out are well aware of his impact on the final products of that committee.

When an issue arose that would have a great impact on the lives of Americans, it would be no surprise to any one of us in the House that CARL would be ready to speak on behalf of those who couldn't speak for themselves, for those who had no advocates.

CARL spoke quietly—and convincingly—knowing that what he was supporting was right for all Americans.

CARL served this body with dignity and integrity. I doubt that he would have defined himself as a great legislator or a hero, but, if we look at two of Webster's definitions of greatness—"remarkable in magnitude, degree, or effectiveness" and "markedly superior in character or quality"—then surely he was describing CARL PERKINS.

But, perhaps, the definition of greatness that would appeal most to CARL would have been one by Bernard Baruch in August 1964, at a press conference on the occasion of his 94th birthday. Asked who was the greatest man in his time, Baruch replied:

The fellow that does his job every day. The mother who has children, and gets up, and gets the breakfast, and keeps them clean, and sends them off to school. The fellow who keeps the streets clean—without him we wouldn't have any sanitation. The unknown soldier. Millions of men.

CARL would have appreciated that definition of greatness because it symbolizes CARL himself. It symbolizes the love of mankind for each other through the little things that count—like learning to read, getting a hot lunch, saving a life, and so on.

Perhaps this body would be better if we all followed CARL's approach to legislative work: Worry about the people and forget about grabbing the headlines.

This body will surely feel the loss of CARL PERKINS as much as his family and many of us individually already do.

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, in paying tribute to our esteemed colleague and good friend CARL PERKINS, we must recognize above all else that he was a legislators legislator. He will be sorely missed.

I can't think of another Member of Congress who worked as tirelessly and effectively for the benefit of his district as did CARL PERKINS. His accomplishments on behalf of Kentucky's Seventh District, one of the Nation's poorest, were remarkable. That his people came first is clear from the long list of what CARL considered his proudest achievements—dams, flood control projects, hospitals, schools, and roads.

The greatness of CARL PERKINS was his ability to translate his concern for his constituents to a concern for all the underdogs in this Nation. Seeing the conditions under which the coal miners in his district labored, he sponsored and/or supported Federal programs to aid those suffering from black lung disease, as well as to improve worker health and safety generally. The legislation he supported benefited workers nationwide who had been working in unsafe and unhealthy conditions and often paying with their lives.

Seeing the lack of opportunity for many of his constituents, CARL was a tireless advocate of Federal aid to education at all levels. He was instrumental in shaping such programs as Federal aid to libraries, vocational training, Head Start, student loans, adult education and job training programs. As chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, he was able to secure passage of these programs he knew would prove invaluable. How many millions of Americans have benefited from this dedication and vision?

Even those who didn't agree with CARL's views could not doubt his motives. He never forgot his origins, never lost his humility and never compromised his principles. All of us admired his legislative prowess. We loved and respected CARL PERKINS, both as a colleague and a friend. And we will miss him very much.

● Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to participate in the honor being paid to my late chairman, colleague and personal friend and advisor—the Honorable CARL D. PERKINS of Kentucky.

It was with great personal sadness and a sense of loss that I heard of the passing of Chairman PERKINS. In the 7½ years I have served as a Representative in Congress, he was always generous and helpful toward me, as he was with everyone, and I benefited greatly from his advice and assistance as a member of the House Education and Labor Committee.

Chairman PERKINS loved the people of the Seventh Congressional District of Kentucky, and they loved him. He personified the highest ideals of public service, working untiringly on behalf of the people he represented and on behalf of the entire Nation. He understood that education was the weapon with which to break the cycle of poverty, and no one else was as effective as he in working to ensure that education was made more available to all. For education to be most effective, good nutrition for the children also was vital, and Chairman PERKINS saw that clearly and worked to ensure that good nutrition was available to the children of economically deprived families. He was the unquestioned champion of making education programs more effective so that the level of education in our country could be raised. He was fearless and unshakeable in his opposition to those who felt that our Nation should cut back on its financial commitment to education, strongly believing that such action was the most false of all economies.

I am proud to have had the privilege of serving with such a great man. He will be greatly missed by all of us on the committee and in the Congress. His legacy to us must be the example he set for us to continually strive to improve the educational system of our Nation, to see education as an investment instead of as a cost, and to recognize that education is one of our greatest resources in our effort to ensure that all of our citizens can live in dignity and in decency.

● Mr. RUDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in expressing deep sorrow at the passing of our friend and colleague, the dean of the Kentucky delegation, the Honorable CARL PERKINS.

As Representative of Kentucky's Seventh District for 36 years and as distinguished chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, CARL made major contributions to the improvement of his district, his State and to American society at large.

We did not always agree on policy, but I admired so good and kindly a man as was CARL PERKINS for his forthrightness and his ability as an outstanding Congressman.

He will be sadly missed by all of us.

● Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in tribute to one of this body's most dedicated public servants and chairman of the important Committee on Education and Labor, the Honorable CARL D. PERKINS.

Who, then, do I call educated? First, those who control circumstances instead of being mastered by them; those who meet all occasions and act in accordance with intelligent thinking; those who are honorable in all dealings, who treat good-naturedly persons and things that are disagreeable; and furthermore, those who hold their pleasure under control and are not overcome by misfortune; finally those who are not spoiled by success.

Those words were said in another age by, perhaps, this world's greatest educator, Socrates. And yet those words apply to our colleague, CARL PERKINS, the man, the politician and the educator.

CARL certainly took control of events and never let himself be directed by them. He was, indeed, a sensible and wise individual. He was a man true to his word and was known by all to stand by it. His sense of humor saw him through many acrimonious debates; he kept a tight reign on his public and private demeanor and was a gentleman at all times; and it certainly never occurred to him to complain to others of his misfortunes, knowing they had many of their own to face. By any measure, CARL was a successful man—he set his goals to serve the people of Kentucky and he did not waiver in his direction in all the years he was in Congress. He was neither spoiled by the easy election victories nor impressed with the heady politics and personalities of Washington, DC. Yes, he was a successful man who was humbled by his success rather than overcome with the importance of it.

Finally, and certainly on an equal par with all of this, CARL PERKINS not only lived those Socratic words, he tried to impose upon this country that quality of education which would instill those ideals within each child taught so that our future strength through knowledge would be ensured. He wanted education to be more than book knowledge. He wanted the system to encourage inquisitiveness and imagination. And he wanted it to support the moral fabric of family values. I know he was proud of what we have achieved over the years, but there was so much left to accomplish. He left us a legacy of hope for the future through our children and we will honor him by building upon the goals that he set. ●

● Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I had the sad duty to attend the funeral of our friend and colleague, the honorable Representative of the Seventh District of Kentucky, CARL DEWEY PERKINS. Although I have only been a Member of this body for slightly less than a year, I have had the honor and fortune to serve under CARL's leadership on the Committee on Education and Labor. I realized early on that behind his quiet approach and soft manner, was a master politician, and legislator, whose dedication and compassion for his fellow man ran deep and unwavering.

While I have had the great personal privilege and honor to work with and know CARL PERKINS, there are millions of Americans who did not have that opportunity. Nevertheless, in one way or another, they indeed had the privilege to benefit from his dedication, compassion and good will. His 1963 Vocational Education Act and the 1965 Elementary and Secondary Education Act have literally changed the lives of untold numbers of our young people. While they may not know who was responsible for the programs they participated in, they will forever benefit from his leadership.

I know CARL PERKINS was a friend of many Members of this body. I am certain he was a friend to many of "his people" as he fondly called the residents of the Seventh Congressional district of Kentucky. He was indeed my friend, and I will miss him. ●

● Mr. DWYER. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to take part in this special order paying tribute to one of the most distinguished Members of this House, CARL PERKINS. I want to thank my good friend and chairman, Mr. NATCHER, for calling this special order. There is no one in this House more familiar with the many contributions of the man we are honoring today, both in this House, and in his beloved home State of Kentucky.

Education had no greater friend and advocate than the chairman of the Education and Labor Committee here in the House. Chairman PERKINS steadfastly and effectively championed some of the most important education initiatives of our time.

He never wavered in his commitment that all Americans be afforded a good education and a fair chance to earn a decent wage and provide for their families. The chairman's sense of fairness was equally evident in the employment area as well, as he took the lead in such vital areas as job training, worker health and workplace safety.

I am proud to have had the opportunity to serve for a short time during the chairman's tenure at the helm of the Education and Labor Committee. He had a vision for the future early in his career that has served to inspire us now in shaping the priorities of the coming decades. CARL PERKINS knew long ago the intrinsic value of education to our people, and he generously gave of his time and many talents as a legislator and statesman to see this goal realized.

We still have a long way to go in educating our children and retraining our work force for the challenges of the future. The Perkins legacy will serve us well in these pursuits. He will be missed, to be sure, but remembered always for his courage, conviction and sense of fairness concerning the great issues of our time. ●

● Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Speaker, I did not get to know our beloved friend, Congressman CARL PERKINS, as well as those who served on his Education and Labor Committee. However, I did have the opportunity to visit with him on several occasions and to observe him in action on the House floor. My observations, I believe, accurately reflect the depth of this great man. He was, without doubt, one of the kindest and warmest Members of Congress. I gained a strong impression that he never allowed Potomac Fever to deter him from the grassroots. His compassion for people transcended his own district in Kentucky, and he was instrumental in bringing relief to the downtrodden and sought to ease the plight of those who could not help themselves. CARL PERKINS is gone from this body, but he left his mark and he will be missed. I'm only sorry I did not get to know him better. ●

● Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues today in expressing a sense of loss over the passing away of one of the great legislators of our day. CARL PERKINS was a friend, a leader and a teacher.

How fitting a monument to his leadership and statesmanship that he fashioned a successful bipartisan coalition to pass the equal access bill. If there was one person in the House who was most responsible for overcoming the many obstacles toward passage of equal access, it was without question CARL PERKINS, who took on his own leadership to shepherd through a bill that he believed in.

Equal access was a battle that I and a lot of my colleagues joined CARL to fight. But, a year ago, there was another job that needed to be done which was of a more personal interest to me. A New Jersey paper had just run a shocking series concerning allegedly scandalous practices by the Department of Education of my own State of New Jersey.

I was stunned at these allegations. I knew something had to be done. But, in all frankness, as a member of the majority side of the Education and Labor Committee, and one who was just entering her second term, I felt lost. How could I ever convince the majority to do anything about these allegations, which involved accusations against a Democratic administration at both the Federal and State level?

Nevertheless, I knew I had to at least try. I owed it to the people of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the response I received from CARL PERKINS convinced me that on matters of principle, CARL PERKINS rose above political implications. CARL not only agreed with me that the committee should respond, but he ordered a full-blown, no-holds-barred investigation. He immediately assigned the issue as a top priority to one of his ablest staff members who was joined by a minority staff member in the investigation. And, Mr. Speaker, this investigation was no cosmetic exercise in whitewashing. CARL eventually scheduled four hearings in New Jersey and Washington, for which the committee exercised its subpoena power for the first time in many years, and order committee staff to prepared a lengthy report.

The findings of that investigation were not easy for CARL. They showed misspent funds under education programs which were very near and dear to him. For many, they raised serious questions about the effectiveness of Federal education programs in general, at a time when the Federal role is the subject of considerable debate. CARL never wavered. The committee pulled no punches.

When I look back on my own career, I will always remember that investigation as my maiden voyage in learning the potential effectiveness and limitations of congressional power. I will also remember what CARL PERKINS taught me about bipartisanship and statesmanship and how reassuring his example was to me.

We have lost a man of principle, whose magnificent stature never diminished his gentle humanity. CARL's legacy is one to the generations of those, young and old, who's hardships were eased because of his dedication and compassion. ●

● Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, among the 435 Members of the U.S. House of Representatives, there are a few individuals who have, through years of diligence and hard work, come to symbolize effective, compassionate representation. The man we honor tonight was such an individual.

Congressman CARL PERKINS made friends easily with his unassuming manner, but House colleagues soon learned that behind his Kentucky drawl was one of the keenest minds in the Congress. CARL was an aggressive and tenacious opponent when he disagreed with you, but one of the strongest and most effective supporters a Member could have when he was on your side. CARL PERKINS was indeed a force to be reckoned with in the House of Representatives, and his leadership will be solely missed in this body.

Congressman PERKINS has left his mark on this Congress and on our Nation. This is a mark, however, that we can proudly wear, for it is a mark of compassion, a mark of concern, and a mark of love for humanity.

In his early years in the Congress, CARL PERKINS had a dream—a dream that seemed impossible at the time. He believed that it was the right of every American citizen, even the poor and the handicapped, to have a solid education. CARL knew that education was the key which all Americans use to unlock their potential.

Years of hard work made this dream a reality. In 1965, the landmark Elementary and Secondary Education Act was passed, and for the first time Federal resources were steered toward education. Throughout his career, Congressman PERKINS continued his fight for proper education for handicapped and disadvantaged children, and many of our programs today are a direct result of his efforts.

Vocational education grew in the United States with the assistance of Congressman CARL PERKINS. He championed education and educators, for he believed America should have the finest educational system in the world. CARL was a fighter for "excellence in education" long before the phrase became the catchword it is today. As his stature and reputation grew, the name of CARL PERKINS became synonymous with persistence and by his example he showed us that a cause we believe in is worth all the effort we can muster.

Although we will sorely miss Congressman PERKINS in the Congress, the Seventh District of Kentucky bears the greatest loss, for these are the people that he loved most. His efforts and his thoughts were always for the district he served and he represented the people of eastern Kentucky with expertise and empathy.

CARL PERKINS served a long and distinguished career in the U.S. Congress and he will be sorely missed by all of us. There is no more fitting tribute to this man who cared for his fellow man than to say that our world and our Nation are truly better for the time that he spent here.●

● Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, CARL D. PERKINS was a man who cared about the people of his district, loved his country, and tried to help the needy.

One can hardly ask for more from a Member of this body.

It was because of his concern for the people of Appalachia that he sought social changes to reduce the suffering of hungry children, unemployed workers, and coal miners crippled with black lung disease. Through his leadership the Education and Labor Committee took on increasing importance.

One could never doubt his sincerity or concern. While his colleagues were always struck by his disarming grin, they also knew that he would fight for what he believed with stubborn pride and determination. He was able to win because of his perseverance, yet he never allowed animosity to creep into his character.

We will miss his shy grin, and his shrewd legislative mind. But we will miss most the example he left us of dedication to his job, his country, and his district.●

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my friend and colleague, BILL NATCHER, in this statement in memory of my friend and late colleague, CARL PERKINS. I thank him for giving us this opportunity.

CARL PERKINS spent his life working for the improvement of human condition, particularly of the poor and disadvantaged in our society. As chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, he was responsible for much of the progressive job and education legislation which President Reagan is now trying to destroy. CARL PERKINS probably helped the lives of more of our citizens than any other Member of Congress.

CARL PERKINS was the classic example of the "country boy." He spoke with the native accent of his rural Kentucky constituents and always played the role of the modest country bumpkin who didn't have the answers to the Nation's complex, sophisticated social problems. Behind that simple facade, however, was the keenest of minds and the ablest of strategists. His simple mannerisms allowed him to achieve more than he ever could have with a more sophisticated demeanor. Anyone who entered negotiations with him on substantive issues soon learned that this was no country pushover—he was just as keen and persistent and knowledgeable as a person could be in the areas of his interest.

CARL will be missed by his family, many friends and his colleagues in Congress from whom he well earned overwhelming respect.●

● Mr. SUNIA. Mr. Speaker, it is with great respect that the territory of American Samoa pays tribute to the Honorable CARL PERKINS of Kentucky. Throughout his career of public service he offered assistance to many whom he never knew, but who held him in great regard.

The people of the territory of American Samoa are specially appreciative of the work that he did for them during his tenure as chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee. For many years to come, our youth will be enjoying much of the outstanding social legislation championed by Mr. PERKINS. Such things as the Vocational Education Act of 1963 and the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 have been most beneficial to our local Department of Education.

While I did not know Mr. PERKINS as long as I might have liked, I have a great deal of respect for the work that he did. He was one legislator who cared a great deal for the little people. Not only did he rise as a leader of the education field, but he has surpassed many in his concern for the poor, underprivileged and those who seldom have a voice where important Federal decisions are made.

I will always admire the conviction he displayed in 1981 when he fought a long but losing battle against budget cuts proposed by the Reagan administration in Federal education assistance, employment programs and child nutrition. His rebuttal was always sincere, not just for the sake of argument.

In my pursuit of better representation for the people of American Samoa I will always remember the example set by CARL PERKINS. He fought ethically for his enthusiasms and was accustomed to besting his opposition. He served his country well and his district well. While both his family at home and his family across the United States will miss him very much, we will always be very proud of his achievements and will always remember his service to others.●

● Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, this legislative body takes this time out from our deliberations to honor the late CARL D. PERKINS, a truly decent and dedicated colleague. Chairman PERKINS was a man of exceptional sincerity and tireless effort on behalf of this great Nation and his beloved State of Kentucky.

Although I am one of the more junior Members of this Congress and of the Committee on Education and Labor, CARL PERKINS greatly influenced my perception of the legislative process and the workings of this House. He always strove, with great leadership and dedication, to take the morally correct and appropriate step. He has set a lofty standard for me and the other new Members of Congress to emulate.

"PAPPY" PERKINS, as he was affectionately called, has left us a legacy of unparalleled commitment to equality of educational opportunity, and an equally strong quest for safety in the workplace. Through the chairman's tireless and meticulous stewardship, the Congress enacted such monumental legislation as the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, the Vocational Education Act, the School Lunch Program, and the black-lung benefits in the Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969. These major programs reached out to children and adults who had been left behind in the wake of educational progress and economic prosperity.

Of course, CARL PERKINS' work remains unfinished. There would be no greater memorial to him than to continue the special work he began: to strive to educate those children who have been left out of the educational system, and to protect those workers who have been harmed by and who remain exposed to industrial hazards.

Mr. Speaker, our Nation will deeply miss CARL PERKINS. The Congress of the United States will be at a loss to find someone as capable, as committed and as compassionate to fill the void his death created. Congressman PERKINS was a distinguished gentleman and an inexhaustible crusader who was an inspiration to all of us in this House.

I extend my sympathies to his entire family at this difficult time. They can take comfort in knowing that his life was full of accomplishments, and that this Nation can never forget the important contributions that CARL PERKINS made to the people of the United States. ●

● Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, when you think of the title chairman—you think of someone like Mr. PERKINS.

He was a grandfather figure. He elicited the respect and exhibited the wisdom that comes with years of experience.

He was firm. No one doubted the authority of this chairman. Everyone trusted his word.

He was committed. He knew the importance of his role as chairman. He fought hard to protect and to promote the "people" programs under his jurisdiction.

He took care of his district. You had only to travel his district to understand the benefit of his work on education, health care and economic development programs.

He was true to his roots. Through his long tenure in Congress—he remained a "man of the mountains" of eastern Kentucky. He loved his district and its people and they loved him.

"He was a faithful friend;

"He was a loving husband and father;

"He was a noble, dedicated public servant;

"He was a good and honest man."

Thank you Chairman PERKINS for the example you set. Every time I hear or speak the title chairman—I'll think of you and miss you. ●

● Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I want to join my House colleagues

today in paying tribute to a man who had great impact on the educational, health and welfare of this Nation over the past two decades.

CARL PERKINS was much more than a House colleague, since we shared a common interest in the concerns which historically involved the Bluegrass and Buckeye States. We shared a genuine interest in the economic strength and future of the entire Ohio Valley and a special interest in such monumental projects as the Gallipolis Locks and Dam undertaking. Citizens who reside in my congressional district worked in his. Constituents who lived in CARL PERKINS' counties of Kentucky worked in the industrial plants of southern Ohio.

The bond between CARL and I in this Chamber was a common bond. The bond is strong, as well, between the people of his district and the people of mine. Our loss, then, is their loss. And in a much greater sense, our loss is the loss to a nation that knew CARL PERKINS cared simply because he placed the concerns of people, and the needs of America, before any consideration of personal or political benefit.

I extend my deepest sympathy to his family. ●

● Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, last month this Congress, and the American people, lost a great leader, the Honorable CARL D. PERKINS.

For those of us familiar with CARL PERKINS' long and distinguished record of having fought to alleviate the suffering of others—hungry children, unemployed workers or coal miners crippled by black lung disease—we will deeply miss his leadership and his faith in the Government's ability to help people.

As a member of the Education and Labor Committee throughout his 18 terms and its chairman since 1967, CARL PERKINS worked to protect the rights of the handicapped and the disadvantaged. Through his efforts as chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, the 1978 amendments to the Rehabilitation Act added new programs to expand employment opportunities and a new and innovative program was established to promote independent living of persons with severe disabilities.

CARL PERKINS would not shrink from any challenge if he believed in the human value of a particular program. For example, PERKINS forged ahead to help create Federal education, employment and antipoverty programs, despite the constant attacks on these programs by this administration. It was his commitment to improving the quality of education that led Congress to pass, nearly two decades ago, the first major Federal program of aid to elementary and secondary schools.

Mr. Speaker, I know this Congress mourns the passing of one of its great leaders. I share the sadness of this Congress, and extend my sympathy to Verna Perkins, CARL's wife, and his family and friends.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Select Education, I developed a great deal of admiration and respect for CARL PERKINS' work in improving the lives of handicapped adults and children. Chairman PERKINS was dedicated to the cause of protecting the rights of our disabled individuals.

Chairman PERKINS had been a major contributor to the growth and improvement of the National Vocational Rehabilitation Program through his legislative activities. The following list contains just a few of Chairman PERKINS' outstanding achievements:

First, in 1968, Chairman PERKINS was the principal sponsor of legislation which became Public Law 91-61, which provided for a National Center on Educational Media, and materials for the handicapped.

Second, in 1971, Chairman PERKINS was the principal sponsor of a bill to amend the Vocational Rehabilitation Act to extend and revise the authorization of grants to States for vocational rehabilitation service and other purposes. The bill which passed Congress on October 14, 1972, was vetoed by the President. On May 23, 1973, Chairman PERKINS sponsored a bill similar to the previous bills which was signed into law by the President.

Third, in 1974, Chairman PERKINS was one of four cosponsors of the bill which led to Public Law 93-516 which: extended authorization of appropriations in the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 for 1 year and transferred the Rehabilitation Services Administration to the Office of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare; amended and strengthened the Randolph-Sheppard act for the blind; and provided for a White House conference of handicapped individuals.

Fourth, through his efforts as chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, the 1978 Amendments to the Rehabilitation Act added new programs to expand employment opportunities and a new and innovative program was established to promote independent living of persons with severe disabilities.

As a member of the Education and Labor Committee throughout his 18 terms and as the chairman of the committee since 1967, CARL PERKINS had been an active participant in the struggle for the rights of disabled individuals. He has proven to be one of the strongest allies of Vocational Rehabilitation Services during the 1981 battle to prevent the inclusion of rehabilitation programs in a proposed block grant. He was essential to the successful vote to maintain the Vocational Rehabilitation Program as a separate and identifiable entity.

Chairman PERKINS' invaluable leadership helped promote and expand vital programs for our Nation's handicapped and disadvantaged. The effective and creative leadership of Chairman PERKINS will be missed by this Congress, and the American people. CARL PERKINS' deep concern for the dignity of those who suffer in our society, and his determination to alleviate this suffering, will continue to inspire us to protect and preserve the fundamental rights and protections of our most vulnerable citizens.●

● Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, the Congress is lesser today with the passing of Congressman CARL D. PERKINS.

CARL PERKINS was a man of wisdom, skill, and compassion. As a former member of the Education and Labor Committee, I quickly came to admire and respect this slow-talking, unobtrusive Kentuckian as a shrewd and effective legislator who remained unwaveringly devoted to the highest principles.

But it is not only the Congress that has suffered with his passing. The people of Kentucky have lost a friend who rose from their ranks and who always remained committed to their needs and their views. And students, workers, and poor people across America have lost an invaluable ally who stood for them when others would not.

Under the leadership of CARL PERKINS, the Education and Labor Committee produced some of the most important and far-reaching social legislation this country has ever known. Less than a year after assuming the committee chairmanship in 1967, he shepherded President Johnson's antipoverity program through the House without major alteration. His other important successes included the Vocational Education Act of 1965 and the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965. Millions of Americans have directly benefited from his work, including coal miners with black lung disease, lower- and middle-income college students, Social Security and medicare beneficiaries, and children who participate in school feeding programs.

During the first years of the Reagan administration, CARL PERKINS saw many of his most important achievements offered up as sacrifices on the budget-cutting altar. I shared his sense of frustration and outrage as the progressive achievements of many years suffered devastating cutbacks that resulted in nothing but misery and hardship, and I joined him in his attempts to salvage and rebuild these programs into what they were meant to be. With the passing of CARL PERKINS, the cause of compassion and fairness has been deeply wounded.

On this sad occasion, I wish to express my profound sorrow at the loss of my cherished colleague and to extend my deepest sympathies to the family, friends, and constituents of CARL D. PERKINS.●

● Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, last month the board of the Association of Urban Universities received a report from its Washington director, Jim Harrison, entitled "Crossing Troublesome Creek." That report was in the nature of a eulogy for our departed colleague, CARL D. PERKINS. It merits inclusion in today's RECORD for its insight into the late great chairman:

CROSSING TROUBLESOME CREEK

As I am sure most of you have heard by now, Carl Dewey Perkins, Member of Congress from the 7th District of Kentucky, and 17 years Chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor, died on August 3rd.

The commonplace observation will be that education, or labor, or the people of the Kentucky hills, or the coal miners have lost a friend. And all these commonplaces will be accurate. The sophisticated observer of the Congressional scene will supplement those observations by remarking on Carl Perkins' "shrewd use of parliamentary procedure" or his "seniority-based influence" to explain his monumental record of legislative accomplishment. I hope that those who, as I do, love Carl Perkins and will honor his memory forever, will not take it amiss if I suggest that those journalistic shortcuts are mostly nonsense.

Carl Perkins was not a student of the minutiae of parliamentary procedure, (though he knew well how the House functioned), nor was his unquestioned influence engendered by some kind of unthinking respect for seniority (though only two other present Members of the House have served the House longer than he).

No, when Carl Perkins won a legislative battle against the odds, when he whipped an unfriendly Administration, insolent bureaucrats and tough and sophisticated pressure groups (and he did all of that a lot), he usually did so because he was usually right!

One of my fondest memories of Carl Perkins, as a parliamentarian, was that of a full Committee markup some years ago on a Black Lung bill. The chairman had moved an amendment to make it easier for those suffering from black lung to demonstrate that a lifetime spent in the bowels of the Kentucky earth had some connection with the shortness of their breath—and their lives.

One of Mr. Perkins' distinguished colleagues, opposed to the amendment, made a very eloquent, a very learned and, to be honest about it, a logically and legally impeccable argument that the amendments were out of order. Mr. Perkins presided over the discussion with the gentle patience and good humor which were his trademark. He offered no parliamentary rebuttal, probably because there was none. He had made his case earlier on the facts of the tormented lives black lung sufferers know.

When his colleague ended listing the citations, analyzing the precedents and quoting the cases, Chairman Perkins simply said "The gentleman may well be right. Is there objection to the adoption of my amendments?"

There was none, of course. In the silence that ensued, as the Chairman waited patiently for objection, it became perfectly clear that no one could bring himself to fight against Carl Perkins' compassion for the dying on the basis of parliamentary considerations alone.

Similar, perhaps less well encapsulated stories can be told about Carl Perkins' lifelong effort to bring education to the educationally deprived, school lunches to hungry children, student assistance to those for whom college had never been even a dream, safety in the mines and construction sites and—the list is long and moving. He did what he needed to do to accomplish what a nation needed to have done.

Another commonplace I have noticed in the obituaries is that much of what Carl Perkins did is "no longer fashionable". Unfashionable may be the mot juste, but it was a never a word to bother Carl Perkins. Those whose compassion begins and ends with the tax returns of the very-well-to-do may find a concern for the necessitous and a penchant for wearing white socks and brown shoes on the House floor to be equally unfashionable. And those gentlemen may well be right. But the Recording Angel will probably spend more time looking at the statute books than at Carl's socks.

There are two kinds of legislators—and we need both of them. There are those—you know some of them—who will appeal convincingly to your intellect, jabbing their index finger into your chest as they make each statistically unassailable point. And there are those who will fold you in one great arm, hugging you to their great heart, while simply relying on your sense of decency. The world's intellect often needs to be prodded by the jabbers. But enough can be enough. In the long run, it is the huggers who do the great things. In the long run, they are irresistible.

I have tried, in these pages, to sum up a man who defies summation. Could it be that he was just not complex enough to be easily characterized and filed away? Perhaps the closest anyone has come to a definitive statement came from one of his neighbors back home.

Carl was buried just across Troublesome Creek, in Knott County, Kentucky. Hundreds of his colleagues, political figures whose lives had touched his, labor leaders, educators, and the people of the hills came to the funeral. It was, according to the Troublesome Creek Times, the biggest such event in Knott County history. The front pages and editorial pages of the Troublesome Creek Times were filled with the usual quotes from the usual notables. But in the back pages, where for years, Bertha Gayheart and Daisy Hall and Martha Baldridge have reported about the lives of their neighbors in Garner and Beaver Creek and Caney and Red Fox and Mousie, they all paused among their account of the births and deaths and church socials, to comment on how their neighborhoods were affected by Carl's life.

Bertha Gayheart said this: "Carl was raised poor just like the rest of us, but he never got above his raising." In the press galleries and cocktail parties, this could be taken as a put-down. God knows it was not.●

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, our dear friend, CARL PERKINS, was truly a stalwart and distinguished Member of our House of Representatives. His leadership of the House Committee on Education and Labor for the past 17 years enabled the House to pass some of the most valuable social legislation of this century. His efforts on behalf of the homeless, the poor, and the disadvantaged served to benefit all Americans. And his valuable contributions stand as a hallmark of how much can be achieved by hard work and sheer determination.

He was a big man, both in body and spirit. And he was an ally to all who would address the concerns and needs of the less fortunate among us. He represented his district as well as any Member of Congress, and he stayed in touch with those he so ably represented.

Mr. Speaker, CARL PERKINS' legacy was one of progress and hope. We can give no greater tribute to him than to pursue most diligently those principles that he so vividly etched for us in this House.

● Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, in doing this tribute to our dearly departed colleague, CARL PERKINS, BILL NATCHER does honor to this House and one of its historic giants.

CARL PERKINS began his congressional service in 1949 when my father, Andrew Jacobs, Sr., came to Congress. CARL and my father became friends forever. And CARL was like a father to me when I arrived in 1965.

When the Federal programs which reflected the best instincts of all Americans were under forceful attack early in this decade, CARL kept the faith and stood at the bridge to defend them.

Generations yet unborn will be in CARL's debt as they live in an ever-better America because of his vision of education and therefore liberty and justice for all.

He was a friend of mine. And I hurt at his loss.

● Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that every governmental body, every organization, every collection of people brought together for a specific purpose, needs individuals who are there to remind them that, above all, one must not forget basic human values in making decisions.

This governmental body lost such an individual when we lost CARL PERKINS last month.

The Congress of the United States, I suspect like legislative bodies everywhere, deals mainly in the abstract. We deal with blueprints for programs, statistics to verify needs, and hope that somehow our vision is ultimately vindicated by the results of the programs we enact.

CARL PERKINS was unique. The abstract, for him, was of least concern. His focus was always on people—children who go to bed hungry at night, coal miners crippled by black lung disease, working families suffering as a result of unemployment, the youth of our country who deserve the best possible education we can provide them.

This has been particularly evident in the past 4 years as he fought relentlessly as chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, to preserve programs targeted for serious reductions or total extinction. Programs to feed children, to help provide a college education for millions of young people, jobs programs for the millions unemployed as a result of economic policies of the past 4 years. His persistence and dedication to those human values which he so cherished, played an enormous role in reversing some of the cuts of recent years in these programs and warding off even further reductions in other programs.

For this special man very little was abstract; virtually everything took on a very personal meaning.

I recall this characteristic when dealing with him back in 1978 on the matter of adding the city of Ashland in his congressional district as an additional place of holding Federal court in the eastern district of Kentucky. The Judiciary Subcommittee on Courts, which I chair, has jurisdiction over authorizing new places for holding court.

It is common practice for the staffs of subcommittees to work closely with the staffs of the particular Member of Congress whose district is potentially affected by legislation. It is also common practice for the Member of Congress to make contact with the subcommittee chairman to express personal interest in the legislation. But, CARL PERKINS was not a common man insofar as representing the needs of his constituents.

My subcommittee staff relates the instance whereby one morning a tall, lanky gentleman came into the subcommittee office, asked for the staff person handling the court reorganization bill, walked over, sat down at that person's desk, who at first did not recognize the gentleman from Kentucky, and patiently waited until he finished a lengthy phone call. In a most unassuming, but persuasive manner, he made his case and ultimately the addition was made in the final bill. In this personal manner, without pretense, CARL PERKINS served as a quiet giant in the House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, this quiet, but forceful voice for social justice has been silenced. But CARL PERKINS left behind a legacy of programs for the poor, disadvantaged, children, working families, and countless others for whom he worked so hard that will live as testament to his kind heart and strength as a legislator.

My sympathies are extended to his family. We will miss CARL PERKINS.

● Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I want to express my profound satisfaction with the passage of the House Talent-Ed Teacher Act, which will encourage and inspire students to pursue a teaching career and to keep talented teachers in the profession.

I am especially pleased that the scholarship program will be named after our great colleague, CARL PERKINS, whose untimely death was a shock to all of us. CARL PERKINS leadership on the Education and Labor Committee opened the way for significant and lasting opportunities for our Nation's citizens. He was continually seeking to make America a better place for all Americans, and consistently and tirelessly sought alternatives to the social and economic deprivations experienced by those who at times were leaderless and friendless.

Among CARL PERKINS' legislative triumphs were landmark measures such as the Vocational Education Act of 1963, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 and the provision for black-lung benefits in the Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969.

He helped to spearhead Lyndon B. Johnson's war on poverty and took on the task of eradicating human conditions of illiteracy, malnutrition, and joblessness. He revered the words of John F. Kennedy that "a child mis-educated, is a child lost" and set into motion a number of sweeping education measures to combat ignorance and poverty.

CARL PERKINS left this Nation a treasured legacy—one which we will continue to honor in his memory.

● Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, the news of CARL PERKINS' passing comes as sad news to me personally, and it is a heavy loss for this House, the people of Kentucky and the Nation as a whole.

Chairman PERKINS will be remembered as a truly great Member of the U.S. Congress. He leaves behind a legacy of social, educational, health, and job-training programs, many of which he personally authored in his 16 years as chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee.

His personal gifts will be sorely missed as well. CARL PERKINS was a tough, formidable chairman, but he was also fair-minded, compassionate and a deeply principled man. Everyone in the House loved and respected the gentleman from Kentucky.

Recently, I had the privilege of working side by side with Chairman PERKINS to enact equal access legislation to protect high school students' free speech rights, particularly in the area of religious speech. Without the tenacity, faith and near genius leadership of CARL PERKINS, this measure would never have become law.

On the week he died, I wrote to Chairman PERKINS to express my appreciation for his work on the equal access bill. Here is what I said:

All of us who believed in equal access are indebted to you, Mr. Chairman, for your tenacity and adroit handling of the issue. There is simply no way this proposal could make it to the President's desk without your faith and unrelenting efforts.

I am personally grateful for the occasion to work closely with you. Having seen a master at work, I am much wiser of the ways of the House than before.

CARL PERKINS possessed the energy and enthusiasm of a new Member while displaying the shrewdness and authority of his 36 years in Congress. His work of 2 weeks was a testimony to his effectiveness. He won passage of the equal access measure, steered legislation through the House to preserve many critical education programs, secured $1 billion to boost math and science education, and was actively involved in the complex floor battle over school prayer.

As so often is the case when someone close has died, I regret not having taken the initiative to tell CARL PERKINS how much I appreciated him as a colleague and as a friend. Hopefully he knew and understood how many of us felt about him. We in the House and the American people are far richer for his many years of distinguished public service.

● Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, from the time I came to the House of Representatives in 1977, I valued CARL PERKINS as one of my closest friends and advisors. We shared similar congressional districts, even though they were in two different States, that produced one of the world's greatest resources—coal.

The coal miners of Kentucky and West Virginia have always held a special place in their hearts for CARL PERKINS, for he was the man who fought and won for them compensation and protection from the chief hazard of their profession, black lung disease.

I am honored to have joined CARL PERKINS in his fight, because we both knew of the horrible effect this disease could have on these brave individuals. But it was not the only fight CARL PERKINS waged.

As chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, CARL PERKINS held firm against budget cuts, regulatory redtape, and nearly every other attempt of various administrations to gut valuable social programs. He carried out this task as a labor of love, because he knew he was serving not only his constituents, but people all over this great land who needed someone to take up their cause, and CARL PERKINS did it with delight.

To show the depth of love and respect the people of West Virginia for their neighbor, I would like to share with my colleagues an editorial that appeared in the Huntington, WV, Herald Dispatch, on the day of CARL PERKINS' funeral:

CARL PERKINS NEVER STOPPED WORKING FOR FOLKS BACK HOME

Funeral services will be conducted today for a Kentucky legend—Rep. Carl D. Perkins.

The 71-year-old Hindman, Ky., native, who died Friday, had served in the House for 36 years, making him one of that body's most senior members. But despite his long tenure on Capitol Hill, he never forgot his Kentucky roots—and never stopped working for the people he represented.

As Kentucky Gov. Martha Layne Collins has said, his strength "was that the people he represented always came first. He never sought headlines. He remained unassuming. He retained the ways of his native Hindman."

Born Oct. 15, 1912, Perkins was first elected to Congress in 1948 after twice serving as county attorney in Knott County and in the Kentucky House of Representatives. But it was with his appointment as chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee in 1967 that he truly came into his own.

As chairman of that key committee from the liberal spending days of Lyndon Johnson through the belt-tightening years of Ronald Reagan, Perkins authored legislation designed to bring improved education, job training and medical care to poverty-stricken Eastern Kentucky. Much of that legislation eventually became national in scope.

The Vocational Education Act of 1963, the Secondary Education Act of 1967 and the Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969 are but three of the landmark bills that Perkins pushed to enactment.

Perkins was stricken by a heart attack Friday while flying from Washington to Kentucky. The trip was a typical one for him—a visit to a mountain school at Blackey, Ky. As an aide explained: "There is a little school up there and they were having a ceremony of some kind and wanted the congressman to attend. It was nothing formal but he wanted to go by and visit them."

That was the kind of congressman Carl Perkins was. And that's why he will be sorely missed.

● Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, CARL PERKINS was certainly a man who truly believed that Government could help people obtain the American dream, and he made that dream a reality by making Government work.

From the School Lunch Program, to providing education for the disadvantaged and assistance for those seeking higher education, CARL PERKINS and the work he did as a member and chairman of the Education and Labor Committee touched literally hundreds of thousands of lives.

As author of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act and the Vocational Education Act, CARL PERKINS' efforts have enabled millions of young Americans from disadvantaged areas to obtain useful educations.

Most recently, Congress approved legislation authorizing scholarships—named in honor of CARL PERKINS—to draw bright students into teaching and to keep good teachers in the profession.

His commitment to our Nation's coal miners was evidenced through his authorship of Federal black lung legislation which enables coal miners who have sacrificed their health to receive just compensation.

Mr. Speaker, all of our colleagues are aware of CARL PERKINS' contribution to this body which strengthened our Nation's commitment to the disadvantaged and disabled. But I have a great personal affection for the man, who when I arrived in Washington, took the time to guide me through the intricacies of the legislative process.

CARL PERKINS will be missed by everyone who looks toward Congress as a body of compassion and good will, by our colleagues who value leadership and understanding, and by those whose lives CARL PERKINS touched as a man, a legislator, and a friend.

● Mr. CHAPPELL. Mr. Speaker, I commend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER], for calling this special order to honor our dear late colleague, CARL PERKINS.

CARL was truly a giant of the House of Representatives. He came from Kentucky to this body in 1949, as part of a great class of freshmen that included my good friend from Florida, CHARLIE BENNETT, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, PETER RODINO, and Clem Zablocki, the chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee who passed away less than a year ago. In this class of outstanding freshmen who went on to greatness, CARL stood out for his leadership as chairman of the Education and Labor Committee over the last 17 years. Most Federal programs in the areas of education and labor today bear witness to his strong concern for children and working men and women.

As chairman, CARL PERKINS was instrumental in managing many of President Johnson's antipoverty initiatives on the floor of the House. These programs were vital to the well-being of the people in CARL's district, located in the mountains of eastern Kentucky. His constituents were mindful of this, and since 1968 he received over 70 percent of the vote in every election but one.

CARL recently received widespread attention for his instrumental role in congressional passage of the equal access bill. I know it was not easy for him to buck the leadership on this issue; CARL had learned the value of party unity from Sam Rayburn. However, he felt that the issue of allowing student religious groups the same right to gather as other student groups was important enough for him to take this step, and the Equal Access Act, which has been signed into law, is a monument to CARL PERKINS' legislative skills and his common sense approach to Government.

Finally, I would like to say in closing that I feel a deep sense of personal loss over the death of CARL PERKINS. Having served together since 1969, I was deeply saddened and shocked to learn of his passing. Incidentally, CARL and I shared a strong love for horses; his home State of Kentucky being prime horse country, as is the Marion County region of Florida in which I was born and raised. We often discussed this topic during quiet moments on the House floor, and I felt a special kinship with him.

CARL was always a pleasant, amiable man with a kind word for everyone, and I know that I speak for my colleagues, past and present, when I say that we all benefited from his friendship. My sympathies go out to CARL's widow, Verna, and his son, State Representative Chris Perkins, who has been nominated to succeed him. Our condolences must especially go to the good people of eastern Kentucky, who have been deprived of his outstanding representation in Congress, and to the students and workers of all the United States, who have lost a great champion.

I thank the gentleman for permitting me this opportunity to pay tribute to CARL PERKINS, and I appreciate his calling this special order.●

● Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky and chairman of the House Labor, HHS, Education Appropriations Subcommittee, Mr. NATCHER, for reserving this time to pay tribute to our colleague, the late Chairman CARL D. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I was shocked and saddened to learn of the passing of CARL PERKINS on August 3. With his death, this House and this Nation lost a great leader and a good friend.

Upon learning of CARL's death, I thought a great deal about his career in public service which spanned over four decades. I know that Members of both sides of the aisle will agree that CARL PERKINS was truly a great statesman.

Since his first election to the House of Representatives in 1948, CARL D. PERKINS worked vigorously to strengthen this Nation and particularly its disadvantaged citizens. Most of the great society programs, antipover programs, and job training programs such as the Humphrey-Hawkins bill would not have been enacted if it had not been for CARL PERKINS. For that, the American people and the people of the Seventh District of Kentucky have much to be proud and thankful.

Mr. Speaker, when I first came to the Congress, my initial committee assignment was on the House Education and Labor Committee. CARL PERKINS was chairman of the committee. Although I served on the committee for only 2 years, I had a firsthand opportunity to get to know CARL PERKINS. As a result of that association, I formulated a high regard for CARL's legislative ability. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I developed a deep sense of respect for CARL's compassion and commitment to the American people.

After I left the committee, I still had the occasion to make appearances before Chairman PERKINS and the Committee on Education legislation which I sponsored. I also appeared before the committee, on many occasions, to introduce my former superintendent of schools, Dr. Bridges. Each time, CARL PERKINS was courteous, considerate, and patient.

He was that kind of individual. He was always concerned about his fellow man whether they resided in his home of Hindman, KY, or walked the streets of any city of America.

Through the years, my respect and admiration for CARL grew. I know that many of my colleagues share that assessment of CARL.

I will miss his compassion and dedication to the Congress, to America, and to the people. At this time, I send my condolences to his family and his constituents.

Again, thank you Mr. Speaker and Mr. NATCHER for allowing me to join in this tribute to my friend, the late CARL D. PERKINS.●

● Mrs. BURTON of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my colleagues in paying tribute to CARL PERKINS.

CARL and I were friends for many years before I came to Congress and he was my subcommittee and full committee chairman over the past year. My husband Phillip served with CARL on the Education and Labor Committee for almost 20 years.

As a legislator, he had few equals. His record of achievement in education is historic; his commitment to education was strong long before it became the latest political trend.

CARL PERKINS was champion of the powerless—he used his influence and power for those who had little of their own. His mighty ambition was to ensure that these people worked in safe places, that they had adequate nutrition, and that they had good schools for their children. Millions of families throughout this country live better lives because of his work.

This body will miss him. We look forward to his son, Chris, carrying on his fine tradition in the House.●

● Mr. CARR. Mr. Speaker, I am truly saddened over the passing of our friend and colleague CARL D. PERKINS. He was a good man, a fine and able Congressman, and truly a man of the people from the rolling hills of Kentucky. His life was dedicated to the belief that government should be a positive force reaching out to help the less fortunate in our society. The great improvement in the quality of the lives of the people in the Seventh District of Kentucky is a monument to his achievements.

Millions of Americans have benefited enormously from CARL PERKINS' efforts on their behalf. Students from disadvantaged areas have gained a valuable education, and been given the means to better themselves, by the 1963 Vocational Education Act and the 1965 Elementary and Secondary Education Act. CARL PERKINS wrote and played an instrumental role in the passage of both of these acts. He had a strong commitment to the goal of improved educational opportunities for all Americans and great strides were made under his leadership.

Education was not the only area where CARL PERKINS worked to help those in need. Coal miners in Kentucky and elsewhere across the Nation who suffer from black lung disease now receive deserved compensation, largely thanks to CARL PERKINS. The Johnson administration's War on Poverty programs were passed under his guiding hand. Always a man of principle, he was 1 of only 11 Southern Democrats in the House to vote for the Civil Rights Act of 1964. In this and so many other ways, CARL PERKINS demonstrated what a great man he was. I have nothing but praise for him, and we are much the poorer for his absence.

I wish to express my sincere condolences to his family and to his wife Verna. He will be missed by all of us.●

● Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, during his 35 years as a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, CARL D. PERKINS served a constituency far broader than his own. His eastern Kentucky mountain district strengthened the Nation by providing an effective spokesman and tireless worker for the poor, the old and disabled, the educationally deprived, the hungry, and those whom the economic system left behind.

He was born and brought up among the poor. Although a long career of distinguished public service brought him many honors and gained him wide recognition in the world, CARL shunned the trendy sophistication of the hour. He held fast the simple beliefs and direct action of his heritage.

CARL PERKINS was an early advocate of Federal aid to education, a position spurred by his firsthand knowledge that the children of the poor were triply handicapped by inadequate schools, poor nutrition, and limited career opportunities. After years of stalemate in a hostile Congress, CARL finally prevailed when the landmark Elementary and Secondary Education Act was signed into law in 1965. Also, he sponsored the Vocational Education Act of 1963 which expanded and unified prior Federal programs in that field. And 5 years later, he steered to passage the 1968 amendments which authorized Federal support for vocational education on a scale never before thought possible. His long-fought-for Adult Basic Education Act became law in 1964.

CARL was an early and enthusiastic supporter of President Lyndon Johnson's War on Poverty and a key sponsor of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964. During the early years of the Office of Economic Opportunity's efforts to stimulate jobs, training, health care, and organization of the underprivileged of society, CARL was the agency's champion in the House. Some of the more conservative interests of the House and of the country were unnerved by OEO's success, and the agency was threatened with extinction when it came up for reauthorization in 1967. CARL worked endless hours during the first months of his chairmanship of the Education and Labor Committee and glued together a successful coalition that astounded OEO's friends as well as its enemies.

When the Nixon administration came to power in 1969 with the announced intention of dismantling the antipoverty program, it was the silhouette of CARL PERKINS that appeared on the battlements to rally the troops and wave the banner of the poor against the attack.

CARL's advocacy and strong leadership in enacting student aid legislation made it possible for thousands of poor young people to attend college and move on to successful, contributing careers.

He is recognized throughout the Nation for his work in support of child nutrition and school feeding programs which immensely benefitted poor children.

He has been a strong force for area development legislation which he viewed as a tool to provide jobs, decent public facilities, and an end to the isolation that weighs so heavily upon poor people.

Because he has seen hundreds of coal miners in his native Appalachia sicken and die with pulmonary diseases induced by coal dust in the work place, CARL wrote and literally hammered to passage the black lung benefits provision of the Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969. He thereby brought recompense to thousands of American miners and their families for whom industrial disability would have meant the end of income and the rapid descent into poverty and want.

There is no way to adequately reiterate the accomplishments of CARL D. PERKINS. But his eminent role in the Congress is very clear: The No. 1 public servant of the poor. ●

● Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, the death of our colleague, CARL D. PERKINS, is an inestimable loss to the Congress of the United States. There are no words to describe the breadth of his influence in this Chamber.

CARL PERKINS will be remembered as a friend of the working man and a friend of education; but his devotion to the people of eastern Kentucky, to the people of his country, and to the institutions which protect our freedom reached far beyond the interests of any specific constituency. Among the many men and women who have served so well in this body, he was truly a giant.

Many of CARL's constituents were descended from the settlers who came to Kentucky with Daniel Boone, and everything about CARL, from his soft voice to his perpetual grin, reflected his mountain heritage. Is it any surprise that he was a major figure, a pioneer, in the fields of education, social services, and labor?

The many laws and programs that bear his imprint will assure that CARL PERKINS will not be forgotten. But those of us who were privileged to serve with him will not only remember his accomplishments, we will remember his friendship as well. CARL was determined and tenacious, but he was also gentle and kind.

CARL PERKINS was the embodiment of all that is honorable and upright in public service. ●

● Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, it was with great shock and sadness that I learned of the passing of our colleague, the Honorable CARL PERKINS on August 3, 1984. CARL PERKINS was both a personal friend and a friend of the Committee on Science and Technology. He was a man of unswerving integrity and of dedication to the programs in which he believed whether or not they were in fashion with an administration. There never has been and may never be again a more knowledgeable and articulate spokesman for Federal education programs. In his 17 years as chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor he did as much as anyone to invent and fashion the current Federal role in education. He was a leader in the development of employment and antipoverty legislation and a strong advocate for the use of coal. Those of us who survive him have lost a mentor and a legislative force to be reckoned with. The fact that he did not have a serious challenger in almost 30 years in a bipartisan State says much about the respect and admiration that Representative PERKINS enjoyed both at home in Kentucky and here in the Nation's capitol.

We on the Committee on Science and Technology were honored to work with Representative PERKINS many times over the years on matters of lasting importance. I remember with gratitude in the early 1970's Congressman PERKINS' effort to help launch a synthetic fuels industry. He was co-sponsor with our great former chairman, Olin Teague, in the 93d Congress of the first serious effort to establish loan guarantee programs for new technologies using our vast coal resources. Representative PERKINS supported these programs with equal tenacity during the early years when the technologies were emerging into public awareness, during their popular years when they were touted as the primary answer to our energy problems of the future, and in the latter years when they had lost some of their popularity. CARL PERKINS had been around Washington long enough to know what he believed in and he stuck to his guns.

He also exerted strong leadership in those problems directly affecting his district, coal mining health and safety, and flood control. When he came to Congress there was no Federal legislation on health, and only very limited requirements for mine safety. He was among the first to push for stronger coal mine health and safety legislation, and worked very hard in the 1970's to assure that the legislation then on the books was implemented for coal miners and their families.

He was well aware of the enormous benefits of proper flood control in the area of eastern Kentucky which was plagued by floods. Through his unrelenting efforts the Tug Fork River and others along the Big Sandy were dammed. As a result, millions of dollars in property losses did not occur and many lives have been saved.

It also has been a great pleasure over the years to work with CARL PERKINS in an area of crucial importance to both of us, scientific and technical education. For these programs, Representative PERKINS' last year was one of his most effective. He was a moving force behind the recently enacted legislation to boost the quality of math and science curricula and teacher training that were considered both by the Education and Labor Committee and the Committee on Science and Technology. He is the father of this year's vocational education amendments that will make sure that the Nation's vocational schools participate fully in the current technological revolution. He also was a prime mover behind the computer literacy bill which may soon be considered on the floor of the House of Representatives. We can all be grateful that this work was well underway before Representative PERKINS was taken from us.

Mr. Speaker, as you and I well know from years of firsthand experience, CARL PERKINS was one of the true giants of the House of Representatives and he is sorely missed by those of us who knew and respected him. ●

● Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, for over 35 years our dear friend and cherished colleague, CARL PERKINS, was an imposing figure in the Congress. His name is synonymous with landmark social legislation that has had a monumental impact on the body politic. His success as a legislator is legend, and an incredible amount of statutes bear his name as author.

When CARL PERKINS departed this life he was in the process of doing what he had done for 35 years; namely, returning to eastern Kentucky to meet with his friends and constituents. He loved the people of eastern Kentucky and he fought tenaciously for them. His people loved him too, and the proof is found in the overwhelming majority he received every other November at election time.

CARL PERKINS was the epitome of the Kentucky gentleman. He was courtly, generous, and kind. As he moved about the Halls of Congress, no one was a stranger to him. He knew no class or priority of class. He was an egalitarian in the classic sense, a man who loved democracy, preached democracy, and practiced democracy.

As I pointed out, so much legislation bears his name until a recapitulation would be almost impossible. He awakened the Nation to the plight of the poor. He fought for the working men and women. He believed in education, quality education and universal education for all our citizens, and again, far-reaching, landmark educational measures bear his name and his genius. In short, he knew how to legislate, and when the future historian writes the ultimate handbook on how to legislate that historian can use CARL PERKINS as his role model.

Kentucky, the Nation, and Congress will sorely miss CARL PERKINS. He was a giant of a man, the kind of man that can only be produced by a free society that places ultimate value on the wealth and dignity of its citizens. He excelled in every aspect of citizenry and public service—a combat soldier, elected official, community leader, family man and a person of deep and abiding faith in the Almighty.

Mr. Speaker, the CARL PERKINS kind of man is not easily replaced, and in the months and years ahead, we'll all realize this more and more. We've lost a great friend, and I for one will cherish his memory.●

● Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Bill Natcher for this opportunity for Members of Congress to say good words about our friend CARL PERKINS.

Good words are all I know to say about CARL PERKINS, because he was that sort of Congressman. Whether you agreed with him or not he never lost his temper in dealing with his colleagues on the floor.

CARL had special feelings, special love, and special devotion for the people he represented in the great State of Kentucky. He was especially mindful of those individuals throughout America, through no fault of their own, were not privileged to get an education, and he spoke for them continuously in the Halls of Congress.

I was not privileged to attend his funeral because of other commitments, but I understand there was a tremendous outpouring of affection from all walks of life, and that the numbers were so large that many had to stand on the outside.

Mr. Speaker, poets have written, "lives of great men all remind us, we too can make our lives sublime and departing leave behind us footprints on the sands of time." CARL PERKINS left footprints—great footprints—deeply imprinted on the hearts and lives of those of all races, creeds, and colors, who because of his untiring efforts, received a better education and a better place to live. He did all of these things because CARL PERKINS cared. I extend my deepest sympathy to his entire family in their time of need.●

● Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Speaker, the sudden death of Congressman CARL PERKINS is a great loss to us all. This fine gentleman and highly respected Congressman for over 35 years served his constituents, his State, and his country with wisdom and unflagging commitment to his work as a representative of the people. It's hard to believe he won't be here anymore, to guide us, inspire us, and demonstrate the finest skills of legislative work.

Someone once said that there is no outward sign of true courtesy that does not rest on a deep moral foundation. Representative PERKINS' courtesy indeed came from the heart, and it was a pleasure to know him and be the recipient of his kindness and consideration. In his personal relationships and in his work he always acted with respect for the opinions and feelings of others and this served him as well as the process well.

He will be greatly missed, but he leaves behind a rich legacy of legislation that benefited many and will serve as a lasting memorial to this good man.●

● Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding Member of Congress and a good personal friend, the late CARL D. PERKINS.

CARL PERKINS devoted most of his professional life to improving education in this country. Few Congressmen have had a greater impact on their colleagues and this Nation. As dean of the Kentucky delegation, and as chairman of the Education and Labor Committee since 1967, CARL PERKINS was the driving force behind Federal aid to education and to students. His legislative accomplishments are well known. He was the author of the landmark Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 and the Vocational Education Act of 1963. He was an outspoken advocate of student aid programs, including Federal scholarships, work-study, and student loans. In 1978, he engineered passage of the Middle Income Student Assistance Act which for the first time extended Federal education benefits to students from middle income families. And he was the primary founder and a fierce supporter of the School Lunch Program. If anyone in Congress deserves the title of "Mr. Education," it is CARL PERKINS.

Early this year, CARL accompanied me back to my district, where he met with educational leaders, parents, students, and others interested in education issues. Through similar discussions around the country, Congressman PERKINS kept in touch with the concerns and needs of the people most directly affected by the decisions we make here in Congress. He always spoke up for providing educational opportunities to the poor and disadvantaged so that they could improve their chances of sharing in the "American Dream." He never forgot the people whom he was elected to serve.

In addition to his many professional achievements, he was a compassionate, genuine, unpretentious, warm, and sympathetic person. He was a close friend and an admired colleague. With his death, this Nation lost a great Member of Congress and an outstanding human being. It is a privilege to join with so many colleagues in honoring this humble, great man.●

● Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I can add little to the many, many fine statements made about our late friend and colleague, CARL PERKINS of Kentucky. I merely say that I concur with those statements and when the record is written of the thousands of Members of Congress, CARL PERKINS will stand out as one of the most effective Members; one who never lost sight of the people he represented nor of the rightness of his position as their spokesman.

CARL leaves a deep imprint on our country and thousands of people are better off because of his service.

We extend to his family our sympathy and understanding. We have lost a friend and the country has lost a great man.●

● Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my great sadness at the loss of our great colleague, CARL PERKINS of Kentucky. I want to thank my good friend from Kentucky, Mr. NATCHER, for arranging this special order; there is no Member and no chairman more deserving of the thoughts expressed by our colleagues than CARL.

Ever since I first came to Congress nearly 30 years ago, CARL PERKINS served as a model for me and for other Members of this House. He was always honest, always honorable and always caring.

CARL PERKINS worked unstintingly for Americans in need. The list of his legislative accomplishments is extremely long, and I must say that his view of what our Federal Government should do for our people was invariably consistent with my own.

CARL PERKINS believed, deep in his heart, that there is a covenant between our Government and our people, that there is a faith which must be kept.

In education, in workplace safety and workers' health and compensation, in black lung benefits, and in hoards of other areas, CARL PERKINS acted on his beliefs. More, of course, he acted fairly and successfully. Over the years, I should add, CARL PERKINS assembled a superb staff who shared completely his sense of fairness and his vision for our country.

CARL PERKINS was a great Member of Congress and a great committee chairman. More than that, he was a great American. I will miss him, and want to express my deepest sympathy to his family, for I grieve at their loss.●

● Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, I commend my colleague from Kentucky for taking this special order to commemorate our late colleague, CARL PERKINS.

The House of Representatives has lost one of its truly great humanitarians. Congressman PERKINS devoted his life to improving the lot of others, particularly his constituents from the hollows of Kentucky.

CARL PERKINS was determined to make life better for succeeding generations and to improve opportunity for everyone, particularly the physically handicapped, economically disadvantaged and poorly educated.

Every major piece of legislation coming through the House of Representatives dealing with education or rehabilitation in the last 36 years bore his stamp. While it would take hours to review his entire legislative record, I would like to remind my colleagues of just a few of his legislative contributions.

Significant improvements were enacted in the Vocational Rehabilitation Program as a result of his efforts. He helped enact the war on poverty which established many new innovative programs to help the economically disadvantaged. He played a major role in the enactment of the National Defense Education Act which ultimately led to expanded student grant and loan programs for higher education so that no one would be denied higher education due to the lack of financing. He was the major sponsor of the Education of All Handicapped Children Act—Public Law 94-142. This act opened public education's door to physically and emotionally handicapped children and provided assurance that their educational needs would be met.

Congressman PERKINS was also a strong supporter of the School Lunch Program and spearheaded the drive to provide free and reduced-price lunches as well as initiating the Breakfast Program.

The Seventh District Congressman can certainly be used as a role model for those Members who place top priority on serving the needs of their own constituents. However, it was not only the residents of the Seventh District of Kentucky who profited from the programs that resulted from Congressman PERKINS' work, but economically and educationally disadvantaged across the Nation.

With these major programs in place, it is up to those of us who follow him to make sure that they live up to his expectations.●

● Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, our friend and colleague, CARL D. PERKINS, left a lasting imprint not only on the memory of those who served with him but on the history of America.

His devotion and dedication to the cause of education are reflected in the legislation which bears his name or which came out of the Education and Labor Committee, which he so ably chaired. CARL took pride in his roots. He was an able representative of rural America; yet he recognized that education is perhaps the single most valuable asset a young person can have. He strove hard to make education more available to the average person—and insisted on making that education of the highest possible quality.

In his quiet, unobtrusive way, CARL became one of the most effective legislators in Washington. The reservoir of respect which he built over the years started with a solid foundation of basic values. Whether it was education, tobacco, labor legislation, or any of the other host of areas in which he maintained an interest, he was zealous in behalf of those he represented and recognized his role in behalf of the national interest.

CARL is missed by all those who knew him, but his family can take consolation in knowing that he left his imprint for good.●

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, more than a month has passed since the stunning news came of the sudden death of our beloved friend and colleague CARL PERKINS. Yet, as I participate in this special order today with so many of my colleagues—I still grieve over the enormity of this loss—to this institution—to this Nation and to me as an individual.

CARL PERKINS was returning home to his Kentucky district on Friday, August 4, when he was struck with the fatal heart attack. He was doing what he had been doing for each of the almost 36 years that he served the people of the Seventh Congressional District—he was going home to them. CARL PERKINS served longer than any other Member of the House of Representatives from Kentucky. History may well record that no one served any better.

On this occasion we try and discuss the individual relationships we had with the gentleman from Kentucky, CARL PERKINS. Mine was an especially close and rewarding one for I served with CARL in the arena where his influence was the greatest—on the House Education and Labor Committee. When I began my service in the House in 1969—CARL PERKINS was the chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, a position he held until his death on August 4. Literally and figuratively—he was Mr. Chairman to me for all of these 15 years.

An appreciation of CARL PERKINS cannot be accomplished just by reciting his enormous list of legislative accomplishments. Rather one should view his legacy as an ongoing one—that can be seen in each of our congressional districts. It can be seen in the eyes of a young schoolchild receiving a school lunch or on the day that a college or university student graduates helped by the student grant or loan that helped provide him with the opportunity to pursue his higher education. Perhaps it will be seen in the eyes of a handicapped person who has been able to effectively mainstream him or herself into society through the passage of legislation to end discrimination against them. The CARL PERKINS legacy will be seen each and every day in senior citizen centers where millions of senior citizens are able to get one hot meal a day 5 days a week from the Older Americans Act. This list could go on and on but suffice it to say that CARL PERKINS will be remembered not for being a skilled legislator—but for what he legislated.

Let us recall for a moment the last days of CARL PERKINS. On the very day before he died one of the last insertions in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 2 was a motion by Chairman PERKINS for the House to go to conference with the Senate on H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Amendments of 1984. It was one of several bills which were reported out by the Education and Labor Committee that were awaiting conferences with the Senate. It is tragically ironic that Chairman PERKINS died during an especially productive year for his Education and Labor Committee. The committee seemed to have renewed energy and purpose as reflected in its ambitious legislative agenda which included new initiatives to improve math and science teaching in our schools to providing equal access to groups meeting in our schools—to reauthorization and expansion of such landmark laws as child abuse prevention, vocational education, the Older Americans Act, and a host of others.

CARL PERKINS was an activist chairman. He saw to it that he knew all facets of the work of his committee. No issue was too small for him—no issue too complex for him. He was a fair, determined and even a noble chairman for he always had the good of the people as his paramount concern.

As we remember CARL PERKINS tonight—we all have anecdotes of this man. It seems they are easy to recall because they were so much a part of our lives in this town. I recall so many markup sessions in the House Education and Labor Committee when CARL would not only preside—he would display an awesome ability to prevail. Yet he did not do this by intimidation—he did it largely through the immense influence he had over the committee which came from his knowledge and commitment to the many causes and issues which came before him on the committee. He combined this knowledge with his unique brand of congeniality which resulted in people being cajoled rather than coerced into supporting the chairman. I know this because there were times when I might not have been disposed to support the chairman but more often than not—a word from the chairman accompanied by the strong right arm around your shoulder did the trick.

Those of us with increasing seniority in this body realize that we are sometimes measured by the quality and relationship we have with our staffs. CARL PERKINS both on the Committee on Education and Labor and in his personal office had staff who were loyal to him and who cared for him so much. They gave him many years of productive service and CARL PERKINS in turn gave each and every one of them something in return—a unique learning experience—himself and his work.

CARL PERKINS was a warm, friendly, and dedicated man. He was a man not prone to be unduly casual to his fellow colleagues—he would always call me Mr. BIAGGI over the years but that was more his sign of respect than formality. We all remember his unique characteristics—his rambling walk—his mountain drawl and his incredibly strong right arm which he would use to wrap around you to gain support for a position—or to gavel the committee into session—or to end a vote expeditiously.

How does one pay the proper tribute to CARL PERKINS? I was one of those who traveled to Hindman, KY, that warm day in August. I remember the trip and the awesome but simple beauty of the parts of the Seventh Congressional District that we traveled through. It was easy to see why CARL loved it so much—and why he felt honored to represent its people in the Congress of the United States.

What I also saw that day at the packed funeral service was the genuine love and respect which the people of CARL's district felt for him. They knew that despite more than three decades in the city—that he never lost touch with them. They realized that when he was championing a cause—he was fighting for them. They realized as his seniority increased—so too did his influence on their behalf.

I remember in the audience that day were coal miners and their families. What better example was there of CARL's commitment to the people of Kentucky. He made coal mine safety and black lung benefits personal crusades that he followed through to their fruition. The result of this is, of course, a reduction in the number of mine deaths in America—and the provision of benefits to victims of black lung as well as their families.

CARL DEWEY PERKINS—a quiet statesman—a gentle giant—a good and caring man. CARL PERKINS—a man of courage, competence, commitment, and compassion. CARL PERKINS—a legislator's legislator, both in terms of his tenure in Washington and his service to the people of his District. CARL PERKINS, devoted family man—many of us had the good fortune to meet and know his lovely wife, Verna—who for some 45 years was more than a wife to CARL—she was a partner in all aspects of their lives. His son, Carl Christopher, who has announced his intention to run for his father's seat, was also such an important part of CARL's life. I extend to them again my deepest condolences and assure them that their loss is felt by the House and the Nation.

I in my own way will work especially hard as a senior member of the House Education and Labor Committee to see to it that the many initiatives which have emerged from the committee under the leadership of our late chairman reach their final legislative status. What more effective and meaningful tribute could we pay to this great man than to allow the programs he loved and shepherded so well in the House be continued and expanded to help those in need as well as those who cannot help themselves.

Thomas Hardy once wrote: "Measurement of life should be proportioned rather to the intensity of its experience than to its actual length." If one applies that measurement to the life of CARL PERKINS—what a marvelous productive and rewarding life this great man had.●

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, at this time I wish to remember my long-time friend and esteemed colleague, CARL D. PERKINS. When I first arrived in Congress, CARL had already been here for some years. I soon recognized him for what his other colleagues already knew him to be—a forthright and honest person, and a skilled legislator.

CARL was a devoted and caring man, and his soft-spoken charm combined with his limitless energy made him a persuasive legislator. As chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, he was both sponsor and prime mover for the bulk of this country's social welfare legislation. He frequently spent long hours preparing a single bill and convincing his colleagues to support it. The issues of education and public health and safety were closest to his heart, and it was his gains in these areas of which he was proudest. During the numerous times we worked together on various education bills, I was impressed by his tireless labors and endless concern for the plight of others.

CARL never forgot those he was elected to represent. Even after over 35 years in Washington, you could tell that he hadn't ever really left Kentucky. When he returned home, CARL would tour the countryside by car, often alone, stopping to visit with friends and strangers alike. There were few people in his constituency who didn't know CARL. And though he felt a responsibility to the entire Nation, he never forgot his Appalachian roots. These people were not merely voters, but also his friends and his inspiration. It was clear to me while attending the funeral service held for him in Hindman, KY, that CARL's constituents felt the same way about him. In a touching tribute, over 5,000 people crowded into the local high school gymnasium to pay their final respects to this great man. It has been an honor and a privilege for me to have had CARL PERKINS as a friend and colleague.●

● Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, one of the giants of our Congress, CARL D. PERKINS, will be remembered by his colleagues not only for the number of important bills that bear his name, but also because of the strong leadership and dedication to moral principles that he provided.

I had a great admiration for the late distinguished chairman of the Education Committee because he was such an outstanding person apart from his legislative achievements. He was always truthful and frank in expressing his views, yet he was also always a gentleman through and through. His integrity could never be questioned. He was a man we could depend on to provide leadership in the important field of education.

The programs that CARL D. PERKINS succeeded in enacting will provide generations of schoolchildren an opportunity to achieve their potential. Every classroom in America has benefited from his devotion to encouraging education.

The wise counsel and concern for education expressed by the life of CARL D. PERKINS will remain an inspiration for those who follow in his path. We shall all miss him, a truly outstanding man.●

● Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, it was with immense shock and sadness that I learned of the passing of our beloved colleague, CARL PERKINS. His death will be mourned by millions of Americans, but those of us who were his friends are desolate.

When I came to this great House of Representatives in January 1963, CARL PERKINS was not yet the chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, but even then he was referred to as "Mr. Public Education." The schoolchildren of America had a friend in high places who was making certain that their education needs were being addressed.

In the late 1970's, I was privileged to occupy a congressional office in the Rayburn Building next door to CARL PERKINS. My staff and his competent and friendly staff became friends as well as neighbors. Their door was always open to us. I personally spent many congenial hours chatting with CARL and the splendid men and women who worked with him.

Earlier this year, CARL and I had our first disagreement. It was regarding the legislation known as "equal access." CARL, in his most sincere and honest way, wanted it enacted. I didn't, and I worked to defeat it. CARL won, of course, and equal access is now Federal law. It was a hard fight, involving considerable emotion and pressure from outside groups, but CARL and I, while each ardently pursuing our goals, never had an angry word. Many days we walked together to the House Chamber, with CARL in that inimitable friendly way of his, holding my arm.

It seems fitting to mention, that even as CARL and I fought a spirited battle on one issue, we were engaged in another equally spirited endeavor—working closely together this time—to obtain approval of the Civil Rights Act of 1984. This bill to reaffirm civil rights laws which prohibit Federal aid to institutions that discriminate was passed by the House on June 26, in no small measure due to the diligent efforts CARL made. Its approval by the Senate and enactment into law will be a fitting tribute to CARL's outstanding tenure in Congress and to his decades of service to the cause of quality education.

Mr. Speaker, we miss CARL. The children and teachers of America miss CARL. He was truly a giant. ●

● Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join with my colleagues, friends, and neighbors from Kentucky today to honor one of America's great legislators and a champion of our Nation's poor and disadvantaged. CARL PERKINS' influence in this Chamber and across our land has been felt over the course of five decades.

In 1948, the good people of Kentucky's Seventh District elected CARL PERKINS to represent their concerns in Washington. For the next 36 years he did not disappoint them—for while CARL PERKINS will be remembered by most Americans for his efforts on behalf of the disadvantaged and disabled in our country, he will be remembered by the citizens of northeastern Kentucky as a kind and gentle man who responded to their needs and represented their views to the best of his ability. That is a lasting tribute.

CARL PERKINS was a people's Congressman who went about his work here with quiet dignity. He was a principled man who stood up for what he believed in, even if those beliefs flew in the face of so-called "traditional political wisdom." CARL PERKINS didn't do things simply because that was "what was expected." He did what he felt was right and good for the people of Kentucky and the Nation.

CARL PERKINS was an advocate for social justice and a leader in the education field. During his 16 years as chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, CARL left his mark on American history through programs designed to help our Nation's children, poor and elderly and others who could not help themselves.

For more than a quarter of a century, Congressman PERKINS was at the forefront of health and education reform in our Nation. From the school lunch program to education for the disadvantaged and assistance for higher education, he always led the fight for the needy in America. His 1963 Vocational Education Act and the landmark 1965 Elementary and Secondary Education Act are but two examples of CARL PERKINS' historic accomplishments.

Just a week before his death, CARL PERKINS led another fight for fairness and justice in our Nation's schools. By bringing the equal access bill to a vote on the House floor, Congressman PERKINS assured that generations of schoolchildren will have the same simple freedoms of speech and assembly granted to others in the United States. The equal access bill exemplified what CARL PERKINS was all about—fairness, equal opportunity and a helping hand for the young, elderly, poor, disabled and disadvantaged.

CARL PERKINS will be missed in this Chamber, but he will not be forgotten because he has left his gentle and kind touch on the very fabric of our society through his legislation. ●

WHAT MR. MONDALE DID NOT DETAIL IN HIS PLAN TO CUT THE DEFICIT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I was not going to take a special order today. I would just like to start off by saying I wish I had known CARL PERKINS better. I have listened with a great deal of interest to all of the remarks that were made about him today and he must have been a giant of a man and I have only been here one term and I did not have a chance to get to know him better. But I think I would like to be a lot like him and I would like to say that to his friend and relatives who are with us today. I wish I had known him a lot better.

Mr. Speaker, we are in an election year and there is a great deal of rhetoric that is going to be heard by the people of this country regarding this administration, and what they have or have not accomplished and along with that, unfortunately, there will probably be a lot of demagoguery and that concerns me a great deal because I think that the people of this country want to hear the issues discussed and what should or should not be done for America in the coming 4 years and not listen to a lot of political rhetoric that is designed to scare various segments of our society.

Now, the reason I took this special order tonight is because the Vice Presidential candidate on the Democratic Party ticket, Ms. FERRARO of New York, indicated the day before she came to my district in Indiana that she was very fearful that the President of the United States was going to, in effect, let the Social Security system go down the drain, cause the demise of it.

And that, Mr. Speaker, is nothing but pure political rhetoric and demagoguery and it should not be allowed in the campaign this political year, this presidential year. Everybody knows, Mr. Speaker, that this Chamber and the Chamber down the hall is not going to allow Social Security to go down the drain. And the President of the United States is not about to let Social Security become a thing of the past.

As a matter of fact, we all know that the President was the person who appointed the bipartisan Committee on Social Security to come up with a program and a plan to save that system and it was done during this last year.

So for the Vice Presidential candidate GERALDINE FERRARO to indicate that President Reagan is going to be the author and finisher of the Social Security System is just irresponsible and I would like to ask her to refrain from that kind of rhetoric throughout the remainder of this campaign.

□ 1850

Former Vice President Mondale just yesterday announced his program for solving the economic problems facing America. He came up with a deficit-reduction program and he said that was going to be the cure-all for this country for the coming 4 years. I think it is important that we talk to the American people about that tonight and let them know what the Mondale-Ferraro ticket has advocated and how that will stack up against the Reagan program.

There was a headline in the paper today here in Washington that said, "$85 billion tax hikes: Mondale's solution for the United States," the cure-all for the United States. The middle class is targeted for much of the cost, and I would like to read just a few excerpts from this newspaper article:

"Walter F. Mondale's newly unveiled deficit reduction plan relies almost exclusively on higher taxes, with much of the burden falling quietly on the middle class. $85 billion in new taxes. The Democratic presidential candidate apparently rejected any sweeping proposals for tax simplification, some of which originated within his own party. By doing so, Mr. Mondale risked evoking criticism from both Democrats and Republicans that he lacks initiative and boldness in tackling stubborn economic problems that persist, despite a 23-month-old economic recovery. There was no consideration of a new and creative tax scheme," said Robert Gough, a senior vice president at Data Resources Inc. in Lexington, Massachusetts.

"He, Mr. Mondale, is dealing with the traditional pieces of the tax code, and you don't get a lot of bang for the buck by playing with the traditional pieces," said Mr. Gough, a self-described, middle-of-the-road Democrat.

Mr. Mondale's plan, announced at a news conference yesterday, would postpone beyond January indexing—a plan that protects lower- and middle-income workers from creeping into higher tax brackets as inflation increases their income.

Rough calculations indicate the delay in indexing would raise about $50 billion of Mr. Mondale's proposed $85 billion tax hike, Mr. Gough said.

Throughout the 1970's, inflation pushed all but the wealthiest taxpayers into higher tax brackets.

And this is very important.

For example, it now requires about $25,000 to purchase what in 1970 could be bought with $10,000.

But a worker who earns $25,000 today finds his tax burden more than double that of a $10,000 wage earner in 1970 because he is in a higher tax bracket.

Other things being equal, a worker today takes home less of his paycheck, can purchase less and has a lower standard of living than he did in 1970.

So Mr. Mondale's proposal is going to cause a larger burden on the already over-burdened middle-income taxpayer.

I would like to do a summary of Walter Mondale's proposals that he made in January and then contrast that with what he advocated September 10, yesterday.

In January, Walter Mondale repeatedly emphasized the need to reduce budget deficits through a combination of tax and spending action and to that end he set forth a plan in January 1984 that he claimed would reduce deficits by more than one-half by 1989. At the Democratic National Convention this July, he pledged to reduce deficits by more than one-half, up to two-thirds, by 1989, but just yesterday was the first time he came up with a plan to do that.

The present study, and they are talking about the one based upon his January proposal, details the dimensions of the Mondale budget problem based on information published to date and assesses the impact on the American taxpayer. The basic conclusions are as follows:

No. 1, Mondale has already made campaign promises that would increase spending by at least $69 billion per year and by as much as $176 billion per year, and I am going to enumerate those increases in just a few moments.

No. 2, Mondale's proposed spending reductions would realistically save only $26 billion, and certainly no more than $40 billion.

No. 3, in proposing to cut deficits which he projects at $200 to $263 billion by two-thirds, Mondale would have to reduce deficits to between $67 and $88 billion.

No. 4, since his spending cuts do not even finance all of his proposed spending increases, Mondale would have to achieve all of his deficit reduction—all of his deficit reduction—through tax increases, and that would require an average tax hike—and I hope everybody in America gets this—of between $1,890 per family to $3,350 per household.

These conclusions are summarized, and I am going to summarize those right now.

The projected deficit that he talked about in the Mondale budget was, on the low estimate, $200 billion, and the highest, $263 billion. The spending increases that he talked about were $69 to $176 billion. The spending reductions were $26 to $40 billion.

So the pretax deficit, after you take into consideration the spending increases and spending reductions, would be between $243 and $399 billion.

Less the deficit goal that he talked about, $67 to $88 billion, that leaves a required tax increase that Walter Mondale is advocating of between $176 billion and $311 billion. When you figure that based upon 92.9 million households in this country, it would cost $1,890 on the low end per family to $3,350 on the high end.

I think the American people ought to know that, because the Democrat Party, which embraces Walter Mondale and GERALDINE FERRARO, must stand responsible for the projected tax increases that they are advocating because they are going to have to implement the programs that Mondale has talked about during this campaign season.

Now we are going to go into this in detail. Mondale spending increases are as follows:

In social spending he advocated an increase on the low end of $1.4 billion for AFDC. For nutrition programs he advocated a $3.5 billion increase. For social community services, he advocated $1.1 billion in increases. For health care he advocated on the low end $6.8 billion in increases, and on the high end $11.8 billion in increases.

Housing assistance, $1.4 to $5.4 billion.

Education, elementary and secondary, between $8.5 and $22.7 billion in increases.

Higher education, between $2.5 and $3.3 billion in increases.

In the area of labor, public service jobs, he advocated increasing that area at $13.6 to $20.4 billion.

Federal pay policy, an increase of between $3.3 and $10.3 billion.

In the area of commerce and trade, Walter Mondale advocated increasing spending to the tune of $8.5 billion.

Export subsidies, between $9 and $50 billion in export subsidies.

As far as the infrastructure of the country is concerned, he advocated increasing spending by between $5 and $33 billion.

In the area of energy, he advocated increasing spending by $2 billion.

In the area of the environment he advocated increasing spending by $2 billion.

In the area of agriculture, which is a very important area, I might add, he advocated spending by one-tenth of a billion dollar to three-tenths of a billion dollars. I wonder why he slipped up there and kept that so low?

□ 1900

I would like to note here that Mondale has defended himself by arguing that he has set forth only general objectives and therefore cannot be charged with particular spending increases, the ones I have just enumerated, but he is either telling the truth when he promises to enact these programs or he is making empty promises and we would like to assume that he means what he says and we therefore have attempted to provide reasonable conservative estimates of the costs to implement the promises that he has actually made.

Now, these figures that I just gave you are based upon the program that he set forth in January of this year.

Now, let us look at what he promised yesterday. Mr. Mondale did not detail his plan—this is what he did not detail in his plan to cut the deficit. He did not talk about these things. Mondale called for raising taxes by $85 billion. That is $25 billion more than he advocated in January; but that was for 1 year alone, 1989.

According to preliminary Treasury estimates, the 1985 to 1989 tax hike implemented by the Mondale plan would be $250 billion in new taxes. That is twice as large as TEFRA, which was $98 billion for 3 years.

The Mondale cap of 10 percent growth on medicare expenditures implies a $32 billion cut in medicare from the CBO baseline over the period 1985 to 1989. The President's January budget called for $13 billion less in savings over the same period and Mondale accuses the President of unfair deficit reduction. That is sheer hypocrisy. He is advocating a $32 billion reduction in this program and the administration has talked about $13 billion less in savings over the same period.

Nothing new in Mondale's plan. Cut national security and national domestic spending. It is incredible, but Mondale's plan would add more to domestic spending than it would cut. The net increase in domestic spending in Mondale's plan as articulated yesterday, the increases in this plan are $30 billion and decreases are $29 billion. That is a net increase in spending of $1 billion, or if you look at the second way you can interpret his promise yesterday, promises as of January were $45 billion in new domestic spending and the decreases he promised yesterday were $29 billion. That is a $16 billion increase, or the platform promises at the Democrat National Convention were $91 billion in new spending and you take into consideration his $29 billion decrease yesterday, that leaves us $62 billion increase.

The grossly speculative claim of $51 billion in outlay savings from the net interest cost in the latest Mondale budget is either a charbroiled number or a return to the high inflation policies of the Carter-Mondale administration of 4 years ago.

There is plenty of detail about tax increases in Mondale's plan, but where are the details on spending cuts?

Unspecified smoke and mirrors deficit reductions in the Mondale plan are as follows: He talked about management savings of $5 billion. He does not tell how.

He talks about agricultural savings of $4 billion. He does not tell how.

Nondefense discretionary savings, he talks about $8 billion, but he does not tell how.

Medicare savings, $12 billion, but he does not tell how.

Growth, he projects at $17 billion in revenues, but he does not explain how he came to that figure.

And interest he said would save $51 billion and that is pure speculation because he is talking about getting the Federal Reserve Board to go along with reducing interest rates because he came up with a deficit reduction plan and that is pure speculation. There is no way of telling whether or not he could get any kind of a concession from the Fed, which is an autonomous agency.

So his total unspecified reductions are $97 billion, which is 55 percent of his total overall reduction plan. I do not know where he came up with the rest of the $180 some billion that he said he was going to cut.

In fact, there is so little detail to the Mondale plan, no budget office in Washington, DC, could even tell you what Mondale would do year by year during his first term. All his plan lists are some broad goals for the first year of his second term.

The biggest nonsequitur of the entire campaign is this. On the one hand, Mondale's plan says a trust fund would be created so his tax increases would have to be used to reduce the deficit. On the other hand, it says that any new spending would be subject to the pay as you go principle.

Does that mean his $30 to $90 billion of new spending for 1985 would require an added tax increase of $30 to $90 billion over the $85 billion he claims will be used to reduce the deficit?

I think the American people are entitled to answers, Mr. Mondale and Ms. FERRARO. I hope in the weeks to come you will explain this in detail, because as a Member of the House of Representatives who has studied your proposal very thoroughly, I am totally confused.

Mr. Speaker, I include the Washington Times newspaper article of September 11, referred to, as follows:

$85 BILLION TAX HIKE MONDALE RX FOR U.S.—$75 BILLION IN SPENDING CUTS IN PLAN

(By Alan McConagha)

PHILADELPHIA.—Walter Mondale, charging President Reagan with ducking the issue of budget deficits, yesterday disclosed his plan to boost taxes by $85 billion at the end of four years to reduce federal red ink.

Mr. Mondale's plan is to bring the deficit down to $86 billion by 1989. The tax increases would be earmarked specifically for cutting the deficit, which is expected to be about $170 billion for this fiscal year.

The plan also includes net spending reductions of $75 billion and an estimated additional $17 billion in anticipated revenue resulting from economic growth.

Assailing Mr. Reagan for conducting "a happy-talk campaign," the Democratic presidential nominee challenged the White House to "respond to the most important economic problem facing the country."

"I'm putting my plan on the table. Mr. President, where's yours?" Mr. Mondale asked. Asserting he is leveling with the nation, the Democrat said the president is a "radical" spender in serving a debt created by a tripling of the deficit.

In a press conference here, Mr. Mondale added: "Listening to Mr. Reagan, you'd never know that our economy faces a crisis. In fact, the economic Dunkirk Mr. Reagan once warned of has arrived—and on his watch."

"Enough is enough, Mr. President," Mr. Mondale said, calling for debates on the issue. The former vice president added: "You can't hide your red ink with blue smoke and mirrors. Let's tell the truth about the future."

Mr. Mondale also led a teleconference here on the effects of the deficit on the American family. By satellite he conferred with his wife, Joan, in Chicago and his running mate, Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, in Lexington, Ky.

After discussing with three families at those locations the families' economic situation, the Democratic candidate charged that the administration has no sense of the pressures it is creating for average Americans.

In another appearance here, the candidate took a walk with Philadelphia Mayor Wilson Goode through the heart of the city's commercial district. Today he begins a four-day swing through the Midwest and the South.

The Mondale campaign contends its plan will lead in four years to 3.5 percent annual economic growth with an inflation rate of 4.85 percent. Interest rates are projected to drop to 7.5 percent and unemployment is expected to fall to 5.8 percent.

The Mondale program would not raise taxes for families with annual incomes of $25,000 or less—an estimated half of federal income taxpayers this year. It would, however impose a 75 percent increase on the wealthiest 14 percent of American families.

The tax hike would reduce the 1989 federal deficit from the Congressional Budget Office's projected $263 billion to $86 billion, according to Mondale associates.

The Mondale program contemplates a reduction in federal spending that hits hard at defense outlays. It proposes to save $25 billion by a variety of measures including tightened spending procedures and an end to funding for the MX missile and B-1 bomber.

Mr. Mondale contended this reduction of defense spending by 1989 would be consistent with annual real growth of between 3 and 4 percent in Pentagon budget authority.

Other savings proposed by Mr. Mondale include: a health-cost containment program that would save $12 billion; scaling back of farm programs to save $4 billion and better management of those programs to save an additional $5 billion, and lower borrowing and interest rates resulting from his overall deficit-reduction program, which would save $51 billion.

Under the Mondale recommendations, all of the increased revenues would be placed in a trust fund earmarked by law for deficit reduction, and they would not be used for increased spending or new programs.

The Mondale proposal stresses the adoption of a "pay-as-you-go" principle, with no new spending for which a source of revenues has not been identified. However, it continues to advocate a $30 billion increase in spending for domestic programs outlined in January.

By proposing to place the new revenues in a trust fund limited to deficit reduction, Mr. Mondale apparently seeks to sidestep opposition charges that the tax hike is yet another measure designed to facilitate the easy spending of the Democratic Party's past.

Mr. Mondale's tax hike would fall most heavily on upper-income wage earners.

He would eliminate future benefits from the final installment of Mr. Reagan's tax cut for individuals earning more than $45,000 and couples making more than $60,000. Those taxpayers would be permitted to keep the tax cut they received in 1984 and will receive in 1985, but then their tax rate would revert to the higher level that existed before the final tax cut took effect.

The plan also would permit tax indexing to take effect for families making $25,000 or less. It would protect families above that amount only to the extent that inflation exceeds 4 percent.

There also would be a 10 percent tax surcharge for individuals with incomes over $70,000 and couples making more than $100,000.

Mr. Mondale would impose a 15 percent minimum corporate tax on economic income, and limitations on "tax shelters, loopholes and accounting abuses."

MIDDLE CLASS TARGETED FOR MUCH OF COST
(By Willis Witter)

Walter F. Mondale's newly unveiled deficit-reduction plan relies almost exclusively on higher taxes, with much of the burden falling quietly on the middle class.

The Democratic presidential candidate apparently rejected any sweeping proposal for tax simplification, some of which originated within his own party.

By doing so, Mr. Mondale risks evoking criticism from both Democrats and Republicans that he lacks initiative and boldness in tackling stubborn economic problems that persist despite a 23-month-old economic recovery.

"There was no consideration of a new and creative tax scheme," said Robert Gough, a senior vice president at Data Resources Inc. in Lexington, Mass.

"He [Mr. Mondale] is dealing with the traditional pieces of the tax code, and you don't get a lot of bang for the buck by playing with the traditional pieces," said Mr. Gough, a self-described middle-of-the-road Democrat.

Mr. Mondale's plan, announced at a news conference yesterday, would postpone beyond January indexing—a plan that protects lower- and middle-income workers from creeping into higher tax brackets as inflation increases their income.

Rough calculations indicate the delay in indexing would raise about $50 billion of Mr. Mondale's proposed $85 billion tax hike, Mr. Gough said.

Throughout the 1970s, inflation pushed all but the wealthiest taxpayers into higher tax brackets.

For example, it now requires about $25,000 to purchase what in 1970 could be bought with $10,000.

But a worker who earns $25,000 today finds his tax burden more than double that of a $10,000 wage earner in 1970 because he is in a higher tax bracket.

Other things being equal, a worker today takes home less of his paycheck, can purchase less and has a lower standard of living than he did in 1970.

Beginning next year, Republicans say workers will receive some protection because tax brackets are slated to be indexed to the inflation rate.

That is, unless Mr. Mondale is elected and keeps his campaign promise to delay indexing for taxpayers earning more than $25,000.

Assuming a 4 percent annual inflation rate, a family earning $25,000 today can look forward to a $1,000 tax hike by 1989 under the Mondale plan.

"The whole thing is silly," said Arthur Laffer, the supply-side guru associated with the 1981 Reagan tax cuts.

"We'd be a lot better off if we went for the Bradley-Gephardt plan which moves in exactly the opposite direction," Mr. Laffer said. "It just shows how far out of sync he [Mr. Mondale] is with the Democratic party's thinking."

The Bradley-Gephardt measure, proposed by Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., and Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., drastically simplifies the current tax code.

It reduces the top tax bracket from the current 50 percent to 30 percent while eliminating numerous exemptions.

Under the new Mondale plan, the top tax bracket increases to 55 percent for individuals earning more than $100,000.

Besides raising taxes, the former vice president's plan calls for spending cuts of just $11 billion and assumes the government will save $51 billion from reduced interest payments on the national debt.

"He [Mr. Mondale] is specific, he wants to cut the deficit on the tax side," said Barry Bosworth, an economist at the Brookings Institution who was director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability in the Carter-Mondale administration.

"From an economist's point of view, you have to do something about the deficit," Mr. Bosworth said. "The issues of where to cut are more political than economic."

Analysts say the federal budget deficit—the amount by which government spending exceeds taxes—threatens the nation's long-term economic health because it pushes up interest rates.

THE COMPETITIVE SHIPPING AND SHIPBUILDING ACT OF 1984

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BATEMAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

● Mr. BATEMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing, with the gentlelady from Louisiana [Mrs. Boggs], the Competitive Shipping and Shipbuilding Act of 1984.

Few would dispute the fact that our Nation's security depends on shipbuilding and shipping resources capable of responding to the demands of mobilization. Yet almost 15 years have gone by without meaningful congressional action while these resources have disappeared at a growing and alarming rate.

We have tried many times to solve bits and pieces of this problem. As a result, our policies are a patchwork of responses to small problems, while the principal issue, survival of national defense resources, remains unresolved.

In just the last 3 years, 19 American shipyards have closed. Almost 40,000 American workers have lost their jobs. And this trend is continuing.

At the same time, the American cargo fleet continues to dwindle and we go on losing our pool of skilled seamen. It is critical that we have available for emergencies not only merchant ships, but those mariners whose experience and availability are vital to national security.

Last month Exxon signed a contract for construction of two Alaska-trade tankers with National Steel & Drydock in San Diego. It was the first order for a deepwater commercial ship placed in an American yard in about 3 years. Until the order was placed, there were no oceangoing commercial vessels either under construction or on order in any U.S. yard. No one can remember when the situation was as bad as this.

It is painfully obvious that we no longer can rely on existing commercial policies and programs to maintain the shipbuilding and shipping resources necessary for mobilization. American shipyards cannot compete with foreign yards that pay no taxes, pay their workers only $2 an hour, build ships with materials bought at subsidized prices, and enjoy subsidized financing at depressed interest rates. American ship operators cannot compete with nations whose ships sail with new equipment and small, low-paid crews.

In the bulk trade, American operators could not compete even if they were given new ships for free. More and more nations have restricted access to cargo from their ports to their own merchant ships.

I believe a comprehensive answer to this problem must be enacted quickly. The Competitive Shipping and Shipbuilding Act is such an answer.

Under this bill, a bulk trading market is created for U.S.-built, U.S.-crewed ships. In the first year after enactment, American importers and exporters are required to move on U.S. ships at least 5 percent of their bulk and neobulk cargoes—chiefly grain, coal, oil, ores, steel, and automobiles. The amount reserved will increase by 1 percent per year until it reaches 20 percent.

Right now, America's bulk shipping fleet carries only about 4 percent of our international trade. We have only about 21 ships in these trades. Under this bill, over 300 ships would be built.

This legislation is crafted to ensure that the ships qualifying to trade will be of high military utility in time of mobilization and war. About 214 of the 330 ships estimated to be built under this bill will be geared vessels—capable of loading and unloading themselves—of 35,000 deadweight tons or less, according to a study by the center for naval analyses. Nearly all the remainder will be gearless oil-bulk-ore carriers of 60,000 to 80,000 ton class, which are easily convertible into ships useful in sealift.

The expanded market for bulk cargo vessels will result in ship production and operation requiring 20,000 shipyard workers and about 6,000 shipboard jobs for American mariners. The need for this pool of skilled workers in time of war is clear, and without this bill they will not be there.

But how can we pay the cost of this proposal? We cannot do what has been suggested in the past—we cannot make our farmers, our miners, our oil producers, and our consumers alone bear the cost of our merchant marine. We cannot say to them, "America is willing to sacrifice your industries for the benefit of the Nation." Because such a sacrifice would be just as damaging as the decline of the merchant marine. We cannot make American exports too expensive to compete for world trade, nor can we ask American consumers to pay for the merchant marine in higher-priced imports.

What we can do is to finally say, the cost of the merchant marine is a cost of national security. It must be paid for by all Americans.

To do this, this bill provides for a tax credit to offset the additional cost of shipping on U.S.-flag ships. The credit is designed to go directly to the importer or exporter—the person who pays the ship operator to carry his goods. In this manner, the tax credit would offset the additional cost without causing any rise in the price of imports or exports.

Last year, some 140 Members of the House joined in cosponsoring H.R. 1242, introduced by the gentlelady from Louisiana [Mrs. Boggs]. I was pleased to be among the cosponsors of that measure, upon which the legislation I am offering today is based. The gentlelady from Louisiana is among the Members who have joined with me in sponsorship of the new measure which adds the mechanism of the tax credit to her concept of an expansion of the bulk cargo fleet.

In these days of high deficits, we dare not overlook the fiscal consequences of any legislation. Fortunately, there should be little or no impact upon the deficit as a result of this measure. Estimates of the revenues which can be expected from increased employment and corporate activity in the shipping and shipbuilding industries under this bill indicate that they will completely or almost completely offset the loss of the Treasury resulting from the tax credit.

It is estimated that about 100,000 jobs in shipbuilding, ship operation and related industries will be created by this bill in the years ahead. And all the people holding those jobs will pay taxes.

To put this another way, the measure I am introducing should not result in any real loss to the Treasury. It will, to be sure, deny the Treasury new revenues, but that denial is necessary in the name of equity to those who will be shipping in new American-flag vessels.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that a bulk cargo fleet expansion program, with a tax credit for our shippers, is an important forward step in rebuilding the American merchant marine. I urge my colleagues to support prompt enactment of this important measure.

In conclusion I am including at this point in the RECORD a statement of Mr. M. Lee Rice, president, Shipbuilders Council of America with respect to this measure Mr. Rice's statement is as follows:

STATEMENT OF M. LEE RICE, PRESIDENT, SHIPBUILDERS COUNCIL OF AMERICA, CONCERNING THE "COMPETITIVE SHIPPING AND SHIPBUILDING ACT OF 1984"

We applaud the efforts of the authors and cosponsors of H.R. 6222 in focusing the attention of Congress, on the emerging crisis in national security caused by the parlous state of our shipbuilding and shipping industries.

If we are to be able to meet the demands of mobilization, significant commercial shipbuilding and ship repair industries must be maintained because construction and repair of naval vessels alone will not sustain capabilities required to mobilize for and fight a global war.

Eleven of America's 15 top trading partners, including the top seven nations, engage in cargo reservation to protect their own fleets.

The Warsaw Pact nations reserve their cargoes for large state-owned fleets that are used for military, political, and other non-commercial purposes.

In this atmosphere, an American company wishing to operate profitably in the world market for bulk vessels faces the insurmountable obstacle of a market which has no reserved place for him. With the higher costs attendant to domestic ship construction and operation, his only hope rests on the willingness of the United States to act as many of its major trading partners have in reserving a place in the market for its own fleet.

We strongly support a systematic process, as envisioned by H.R. 6222, whereby U.S.-flag ships—built in American shipyards with American labor and American equipment and materials—will be enabled to transport a modest share of U.S. bulk exports and imports as a means of ensuring the availability of maritime and shipbuilding resources in time of crisis.●

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 3082

By Mr. JONES of North Carolina:

(An amendment in the nature of a substitute.)

—Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Emergency Wetlands Resources Act of 1984".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) wetlands play an integral role in maintaining the quality of life through material contributions to our national economy, food supply, water supply and quality, flood control, and fish, wildlife, and plant resources, and thus to the health, safety, recreation, and economic well-being of all our citizens;

(2) wetlands provide habitat essential for the breeding, spawning, nesting, migration, wintering, and ultimate survival of a major portion of the Nation's migratory and resident fish and wildlife, including migratory birds, endangered species, commercially and recreationally important finfish, shellfish, and other aquatic organisms, and contain many unique species and communities of wild plants;

(3) our Nation's migratory bird treaty obligations with Canada, Mexico, Japan, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and under the Convention on Nature Protection and Wildlife Preservation in the Western Hemisphere, require Federal protection of wetlands used by migratory birds for breeding, wintering or migration, and are needed to achieve and to maintain optimum population levels, distributions, and patterns of migration;

(4) wetlands, and the fish, wildlife, and plants dependent thereon, provide significant recreational and commercial benefits, including—

(A) contributions to a commercial marine harvest valued at over $10,000,000,000 annually,

(B) support for a major portion of the Nation's multi-million-dollar annual fur and hide harvest, and

(C) fishing, hunting, birdwatching, nature observation, and other wetland-related recreational activities that generate billions of dollars annually;

(5) wetlands enhance the Nation's water quality and supply by serving as groundwater recharge areas, sediment and nutrient traps and chemical sinks;

(6) wetlands provide a natural means of flood and erosion control by retaining water during periods of high runoff, thereby protecting against loss of life and property;

(7) wetlands constitute only a small percentage of the land area of the United States, are estimated to have been reduced by half in the contiguous States since the founding of our Nation, and continue to disappear by hundreds of thousands of acres each year;

(8) certain activities of the Federal Government have inappropriately altered or assisted in the alteration of wetlands, thereby unnecessarily stimulating and accelerating the loss of these valuable resources and the environmental and economic benefits that they provide; and

(9) the existing Federal, State, and private cooperation in wetlands conservation should be strengthened in order to minimize further losses of these valuable areas and to assure their management in the public interest for this and future generations

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act to promote, in concert with other Federal and State statutes and programs, the conservation of our Nation's wetlands in order to maintain the public benefits they provide and to fulfill international obligations contained in various migratory bird treaties and conventions with Canada, Mexico, Japan, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and with various countries in the Western Hemisphere by—

(1) intensifying cooperative efforts among private interests and local, State, and Federal governments for the management and conservation of wetlands; and

(2) intensifying efforts to protect the Nation's wetlands through acquisition in fee, easements, or other interests and methods by local, State, and Federal governments and the private sector.

TITLE I—REVENUES FOR MIGRATORY BIRD CONSERVATION FUND

SEC. 101. ADMISSION FEES AT CERTAIN NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE UNITS.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section—

(1) The term "admission permit" means a single visit permit provided for in subsection (c)(1)(A) or a group visit permit provided for in subsection (c)(1)(B).

(2) The term "designated unit" means any unit of the National Wildlife Refuge System that the Secretary designates, for purposes of this section, as a unit for which admission permits are required of the public for entry thereto.

(3) The term "duck stamp" means a migratory bird hunting and conservation stamp issued under section 2 of the Act of March 16, 1934 (commonly known as the "Duck Stamp Act", 16 U.S.C 718b).

(4) The term "related individuals" means, with respect to an individual holding a valid single visit admission permit issued under subsection (c)(1) or an unexpired duck stamp—

(A) all other individuals accompanying such individual in a single, private, noncommercial vehicle at the time of entry into a designated unit; or

(B) if entry into a designated unit is made other than by such a vehicle, the spouse, any child, and any parent accompanying such individual at the time of entry.

(5) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

(b) IN GENERAL.—(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601-4 et seq.), the Secretary shall charge reasonable fees for admission permits to designated units and shall pay the revenues accruing from the collection of such fees, less 10 per centum thereof which shall be used by the Secretary—

(A) to defray the administrative costs incurred in issuing such permits, and

(B) to carry out the purposes for which the respective designated units were established, into the migratory bird conservation fund established under section 4 of the Act of March 16, 1934 (16 U.S.C. 718d). The Secretary may also sell, at designated units, Golden Eagle Passports and shall treat the revenues accruing from the sale in the same manner as are fees collected for admission permits under the preceding sentence.

(2) Notices that admission permits issued under this section are required for entry shall be prominently posted at each designated unit and, to the extent practicable, included in appropriate publications of the Department of the Interior.

(c) ADMISSION PERMITS.—(1) The Secretary shall have available for sale, and issue upon payment of the required fee, at each designated unit, and at such other locations he deems appropriate, the following permits:

(A) INDIVIDUAL VISIT PERMITS.—An individual visit permit for a designated unit authorizes the purchaser thereof and the related individuals unlimited entries into, and exits from, such unit during such period of consecutive days (but not exceeding fifteen consecutive days) as the Secretary considers appropriate taking into account the nature and size of, and other relevant factors pertaining to, the unit.

(B) GROUP VISIT PERMITS.—A group visit permit authorizes a group of individuals to make such number of entries into, and exits from, a designated unit within such period of time, and subject to such other terms and conditions, as may be established by the Secretary after taking into account the nature and size of, and other relevant factors pertaining to, the unit and the purposes for which the group visit is made.

(2) The fees charged by the Secretary for admission permits to each designated unit shall be fair and equitable, taking into consideration the direct and indirect cost to the Government, the benefits to the recipient, the public policy or interest served, the comparable fees charged by non-Federal public agencies, and the economic and administrative feasibility of fee collections and other pertinent factors.

(d) EXCEPTIONS.—(1) The Secretary may not require an admission permit, nor charge any fee, under this section with respect to the entry into—

(A) any designated unit by—

(i) any individual who has in his possession at time of entry a valid Golden Eagle Passport, Golden Age Passport, or any other lifetime admission permit issued in accordance with section 4(a) of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 460 1-6a).

(ii) any individual who has in his possession at the time of entry a valid duck stamp issued to him,

(iii) any individual who is a related individual to any individual described in clause (i) and (ii), or

(iv) any individual who has been issued a special permit under subsection (e); or

(B) the Back Bay National Wildlife Refuge, during such time as it may be a designated unit, by any individual who has been issued a special permit under section 3 of Public Law 96-315 for that refuge.

(2) The Secretary may not require an admission permit, nor charge any fee, under this section with respect to travel over any national parkway or any road or highway established as a part of the Federal-aid highway system described in section 103 of title 23, United States Code, which is commonly used by the public as a means of travel between two places which are outside a designated unit.

(e) SPECIAL PERMITS.—(1) Upon application therefor, the Secretary shall issue to any individual who is a citizen of the United States, or is domiciled in the United States, and who—

(A) has been medically determined to be blind or permanently disabled for purposes of receiving benefits under any other Federal law; or

(B) at the time of such application is age 62 or older;

a special permit which entitles the individual, during his or her lifetime, to free entry into all designated units.

(2) Upon application therefor, the Secretary shall issue to any individual a special permit which entitles the individual, during such period as may be appropriate, to free entry to a designated unit for purposes to travel to an inholding within the unit.

(3) Upon application therefor, the Secretary may issue to any individual a special permit which entitles the individual, during such period as may be appropriate, to free entry to a designated unit for any nonrecreational purpose considered appropriate by the Secretary.

(4) The Secretary shall issue special permits under this subsection without charge.

(f) PERMIT CONDITIONS.—An admission permit or special permit issued under this section—

(1) is valid only with respect to the individual or group to whom it is issued; and

(2) does not authorize such individual or group to engage in any use for which a fee charged under the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965.

(g) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall issue such regulations as are necessary or appropriate to carry out this section.

(h) REPORTS.—The Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate no later than March 31 of each year a report on the administration of this section during the period covered by the report including, but not limited to, a list of current designated units, a list of units, if any, being considered for designated status, designated unit capacity and visitation data, the amount and disposition of the fees collected under this section, such other information as the Secretary deems appropriate, and any recommendations the Secretary may have for improving the operation of the admission permit program.

SEC. 102. PRICE OF MIGRATORY BIRD HUNTING AND CONSERVATION STAMPS.

Section 2(b) of the Act of March 16, 1934 (48 Stat. 451; 16 U.S.C. 718b) is amended by striking out "$7.50" and inserting in lieu thereof "$10", and by striking out "any hunting year" and inserting in lieu thereof "hunting years 1984 and 1985, $12.50 for hunting years 1986 and 1987, and $15 for each hunting year thereafter."

TITLE II—FEDERAL AND STATE WETLANDS CONSERVATION

SEC. 201. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this title—

(1) The term "effective period" means the period beginning on October 1, 1984, and ending on the close of September 30, 1994.

(2) The term "eligible State" means, with respect to any fiscal year, a State that is eligible under section 204 for payment of moneys under an apportionment made under section 203(b) for that year.

(3) The term "enhancement project" means a project (which may include, but is not limited to, construction, fresh-water flow control, or the introduction of appropriate flora) that will establish (other than by acquisition) a wetland, increase the size (other than by acquisition) of an existing wetland, or restore the natural quality of an existing wetland.

(4) The term "fund" means the Wetlands Conservation Fund established under section 208.

(5) The term "preservation project" means a project (which may include, but is not limited to, construction, fresh-water flow control, or the introduction of appropriate flora) that will minimize or prevent the loss of an identified area of a wetland.

(6) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

(7) The term "State" means any of the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and, to the extent practicable may include the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.

(8) The term "wetland" means land that is—

(A) transitional between terrestrial and aquatic systems where the water table is usually at or near the surface or the land is covered by shallow water; and

(B) generally inundated or saturated by surface or ground water frequently enough, and for long enough duration, to support plant populations or animal populations, or both, which are adapted to the limiting stresses of the environment characterized by saturated soil conditions or conditions of occasional flooding; and includes, but is not limited to, a tidal or inland marsh, swamp, small pond, pothole, bog, ox bow, pocosin, slough, mudflat, or bottom land hardwood forest.

(9) The term "wetlands acquisition" means the obtaining of a property interest in a wetland or associated area by purchase or lease if the obtaining of such interest contributes appreciably to the long-term preservation of the wetland and the associated populations of fish, wildlife, and plants.

(10) The term "wetland conservation project" means a wetlands acquisition, a preservation project, or an enhancement project.

SEC. 202. NATIONAL WETLANDS PRIORITY CONSERVATION PLAN.

The Secretary, after consultation with the States, shall establish, and periodically review and revise, a national wetlands priority conservation plan which shall specify, on a region-by-region or other basis deemed appropriate by the Secretary, the types of wetlands to which priority should be given with respect to wetlands acquisition and the implementation of preservation projects and enhancement projects. In establishing such priorities, the Secretary shall take into account—

(1) the significance of the loss or threat of loss of the respective types of wetlands; and

(2) the contributions which the respective types of wetlands make to—

(A) wildlife, including endangered and threatened species, migratory birds, and resident species,

(B) commercial and sport fisheries, and

(C) surface and groundwater quality and quantity, and flood control.

SEC. 203. ALLOCATION AND APPORTIONMENT OF AMOUNTS AVAILABLE TO CARRY OUT THIS TITLE.

(a) Of the sum appropriated for any fiscal year under section 209—

(1) such percentage of that sum (but not more than 66% per centum thereof) as is considered appropriate by the Secretary, less such amount (but not more than 4 per centum of such percentage) considered necessary by the Secretary to defray the costs of administering sections 202 through 207 during such fiscal year, shall be apportioned by him among eligible States in accordance with subsection (b); and

(2) the remainder of such sum after paragraph (1) is applied shall be retained by the Secretary for expenditure by him to carry out Federal wetlands acquisitions that are consistent with the wetlands priority conservation plan established under section 202.

Each wetland acquired by the Secretary under paragraph (2) shall be included within the National Wildlife Refuge System.

(b) The moneys allocated under subsection (a)(1) for any fiscal year during the effective period shall be apportioned by the Secretary among the eligible States as follows:

(1) 50 per centum thereof shall be apportioned on the basis of the ratio, as determined by the Secretary, which each eligible State's expenditure of funds (other than Federal funds) for wetlands conservation projects in that State bears to the total amount of funds (other than Federal funds) expended by all eligible States for wetlands conservation projects in such States in that year. As used in this paragraph, the term "year" means the most recent year for which the calculation of such funds, for purposes of this paragraph, is practicable.

(2) 50 per centum thereof shall be apportioned to eligible States consistent with the national wetlands priority conservation plan established under section 202.

Apportionments made under this subsection shall be adjusted so that no eligible State is apportioned less than one-half of 1 per centum of the total amount available for apportionment under this subsection in any fiscal year.

SEC. 204. ELIGIBILITY OF STATES FOR PAYMENT UNDER APPORTIONMENTS.

(a) A State is eligible for payment of moneys under an apportionment made under section 203(b) if—

(1) the Secretary determines that a wetlands conservation plan submitted to him by the State—

(A) is comprehensive and will ensure the perpetuation of wetland resources,

(B) was prepared with opportunity for public comment,

(C) is substantial in character and design, and

(D) is in a format required by the Secretary which shall be compatible with standards and formats required of States for grants administered by the Secretary, particularly the Federal Aid in Wildlife Restoration Act (16 U.S.C. 669 et seq.), Federal Aid in Sport Fish Restoration Act (16 U.S.C. 777 et seq.), and Fish and Wildlife Conservation Act of 1980 (16 U.S.C. 2901 et seq.); or

(2) the Secretary determines, after opportunity for public comment, that a wetland conservation project submitted to him by the State is substantial in character and design and meets standards as the Secretary deems appropriate, and the State submits to the Secretary such surveys, plans, estimates, and other specifications for the project as the Secretary may require.

A comprehensive wetlands conservation plan or an individual wetland conservation project with respect to which such a determination is made under paragraph (1) or (2) is an approved plan or approved project for purposes of section 205.

SEC. 205. CONDITIONS RELATING TO APPORTIONMENTS.

(a) The moneys apportioned to an eligible State under section 203(b) may be used for the payment of not to exceed 75 per centum of the costs of (1) any segment of an approved plan, or (2) an approved project, as the case may be.

(b) No payment of any money apportioned under section 203(b) may be made by the Secretary with respect to any approved plan or any approved project unless—

(1) an agreement on the part of the eligible State setting forth its undertakings to implement the plan or project is submitted to, and approved by, the Secretary; and

(2) the Secretary finds that the approved plan segment or approved project has been completed, or is being undertaken, in compliance with such plan or project.

If the conditions in paragraphs (1) and (2) are met, the Secretary shall cause payment to be made to the proper authority of such State.

(c) The Secretary may from time to time make payments on an approved plan segment or approved project as it progresses, but such payments, including previous payments, if any, shall not be more than the United States pro rata share of the segment or project in conformity with the plan or project specifications.

(d) The Secretary may enter into agreements to fund an initial portion of an approved plan segment or approved project and to agree to fund the remaining costs from subsequent apportionments if and when they become available. The liability of the United States under such an agreement is contingent upon the continued availability of funds for the purposes of this section.

(e) Moneys paid to an eligible State under this section shall be applied only to approved plans or approved projects and, if otherwise applied, shall be repaid by the State before it may participate in any further apportionment under this title.

(f) No property acquired or developed with assistance under this title shall, without the approval of the Secretary be converted to other than wetland conservation uses. The Secretary shall approve such conversion only if he finds it to be in accord with the then existing comprehensive wetlands conservation plan and only upon such conditions as he deems necessary to assure the substitution of other properties of at least equal fair market value or a reasonably equivalent usefulness and location.

(g) No enhancement project or preservation project shall be approved unless the State holds an interest in perpetuity on the wetlands being conserved.

SEC. 206. TREATMENT OF UNOBLIGATED AMOUNTS.

(a) The amount of any apportionment made to an eligible State under section 203(b) for any fiscal year that remains unobligated at the close thereof shall continue to be available to that State for obligation until the close of the succeeding fiscal year.

(b) If any amount to which subsection (a) applies remains unobligated at the close of the two-fiscal year period referred to in that subsection, such amount shall be used by the Secretary in accordance with subsection (c).

(c) During the fiscal year after any two-fiscal year period referred to in subsection (b), the Secretary shall make available—

(1) any, all, or none (as he deems appropriate) of the aggregate of all of the amounts unobligated by eligible States at the close of such period to those eligible States not having unobligated amounts at the close of such period for expenditure to implement wetland conservative projects that are consistent with the national wetlands priority conservative plan established under section 202; and

(2) if all such aggregate is not made available to eligible States under paragraph (1), the balance of such aggregate for expenditure under section 203(a)(2), which balance shall remain available until expended.

Any part of any amount made available under paragraph (1) for any fiscal year that remains unobligated at the close of such year shall be available, until expended, for expenditure under section 203(a)(2).

SEC. 207. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary shall issue such regulations as are necessary or appropriate to carry out this title.

SEC. 208. WETLANDS CONSERVATION FUND.

(a) There is established in the Treasury of the United States a fund to be known as the Wetlands Conservative Fund consisting of the amounts that are transferred to it under subsection (c).

(b) Amounts in the fund shall be available, as provided by appropriations Acts, only for making expenditures to carry out this title.

(c) For each fiscal year within the effective period, there are transferred $75,000,000 to the fund from the land and water conservation fund established under section 2 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601-5).

SEC. 209. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

For each fiscal year within the effective period, there are authorized to be appropriated from the fund to the Department of the Interior $75,000,000 to carry out this title.

SEC. 210. CONFORMING AMENDMENT.

Section 2(c)(1) of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601-5(c)(1)) is amended by inserting immediately before "September 30, 1989," the following: "September 30, 1984, and $975,000,000 for fiscal year 1985 and each fiscal year thereafter through", striking all after the word "thereafter" and inserting the following: "through September 30, 1984, and $975,000,000 for fiscal year 1985 and each fiscal year thereafter through September 30, 1994."

TITLE III—WETLANDS INVENTORY AND TREND ANALYSIS AND MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 301. CONTINUATION OF NATIONAL WETLANDS INVENTORY PROJECT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, shall continue the National Wetlands Inventory project and shall—

(1) produce, by September 30, 1987, National Wetlands Inventory maps for the areas that have been identified by the Service as top priorities for mapping, including the entire coastal zone of the United States, floodplains of major rivers, and the Prairie Pothole region;

(2) produce, by September 30, 1989, National Wetlands Inventory maps for those portions of the contiguous United States for which maps have not been produced earlier;

(3) produce, as soon as practicable, National Wetlands Inventory maps for Alaska and other noncontiguous portions of the United States; and

(4) produce, by September 30, 1985, and at ten-year intervals thereafter, reports to update and improve the information contained in the report dated September 1982 and entitled "Status and Trends of Wetlands and Deepwater Habitat in the Conterminous United States, 1950's to 1970's".

(b) NOTICE.—The Secretary shall notify the appropriate State and Local units of government at such time as he proposes to begin map preparation under subsection (a) in an area. Such notice shall include, but is not limited to, an identification of the area to be mapped, the proposed schedule for completion, and the identification of a source for further information.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of the Interior the following sums, to remain available until expended:

(1) $14,500,000 for each of the fiscal years occurring in the period beginning on October 1, 1984, and ending at the close of September 30, 1987, to carry out subsection (a)(1).

(2) $6,750,000 for each of the fiscal years occurring in the period beginning on October 1, 1987, and ending at the close of September 30, 1994, to carry out subsection (a)(2) and (3).

(3) $900,000 for each of the fiscal years occurring in the period beginning on October 1, 1984, and ending at the close of September 30, 1996, to carry out subsection (a)(4).

SEC. 302. WETLANDS LOSS REPORT TO CONGRESS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall, by September 30, 1985, prepare and submit to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate a report regarding wetlands losses in the United States.

(b) REPORT CONTENTS.—The report required under

(1) an analysis of the causes of wetlands destruction and degradation;

(2) a compilation and analysis of Federal statutory and regulatory mechanisms, including expenditures and financial assistance, which induce wetlands destruction or degradation;

(3) a compilation and analysis of Federal expenditures resulting from wetlands destruction and degradation;

(4) an analysis of the environmental and economic impacts (including, but not limited to, the impact on property values and local economic impacts) of eliminating or restricting future Federal expenditures and financial assistance, whether direct or indirect, which have the effect of encouraging the destruction or degradation of wetlands, including but not limited to: public works expenditures; assistance programs such as price-support programs, commodity loans and purchase programs, and disaster assistance programs; soil conservation programs; and certain income tax provisions;

(5) an analysis of the environmental and fiscal impact of failure to restrict future Federal expenditures and financial assistance which have the effect of encouraging the destruction or degradation of wetlands, including but not limited to: assistance for normal silviculture activity (such as plowing, seeding, planting, cultivating, minor drainage, or harvesting for the production of fiber or forest products); Federal expenditures required incident to studies, evaluations, design, construction, operation, maintenance, or rehabilitation of Federal water resource development activities, including channel improvements; the commodity loans and purchases program, and cotton, feed grain, wheat, and rice production stabilization programs administered by the Department of Agriculture; Federal expenditures for the construction of publicly owned or publicly operated highways, roads, structures, or facilities that are essential links in a larger network or system; and general revenue-sharing grants made under section 102 of the State and Local Fiscal Assistance Amendments of 1972 (31 U.S.C. 1221); and

(6) recommendations for the conservation of wetlands resources based on an evaluation and comparison of all management alternatives, and combinations thereof, such as State and local actions, Federal actions, and initiatives by private organizations and individuals.

(C) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated $1,000,000 to carry out the provisions of this section, which sum shall be available until expended.

SEC. 303. WETLANDS LOAN ACT.

Section 3 of the Wetlands Loan Act (16 U.S.C. 715k-5) is amended by striking out the first three sentences thereof.

SEC. 304. MIGRATORY WATERFOWL AREA ACQUISITION.

Section 7(a)(1) of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601-9(a)(1)) is amended by striking out "except migratory waterfowl areas which are authorized to be acquired by the Migratory Bird Conservation Act of 1929, as amended".

TITLE IV—PROVISIONS AFFECTING FEDERAL LANDS AT MANTEO BAY, NORTH CAROLINA

SEC. 401. MANTEO BAY PROJECT.

(a) COST-BENEFIT RATIO REQUIRED.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no funds may be expended to carry out the project at Manteo (Shallowbag) Bay, North Carolina (authorized by section 101 of the River and Harbor Act of 1970 and herein after referred to as the "Manteo Bay project") unless a cost-benefit analysis of the Manteo Bay project is first prepared by the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, and that analysis discloses a favorable cost-benefit ratio regarding that project.

(b) USE OF CERTAIN FEDERAL LANDS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, is authorized to use land within the boundaries of the Cape Hatteras National Seashore and land within the boundaries of the Pea Island National Wildlife Refuge which he determines to be necessary to carry out the Manteo Bay project.

(c) EFFECTS OF USE.—In implementing the authority under subsection (b), the Secretary of the Army, in consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, shall, to the extent practicable and consistent with the construction and continued operation of the Manteo Bay project, carry out the project in such manner as to (1) maintain the essential integrity of the Pea Island National Wildlife Refuge and the Cape Hatteras National Seashore; and (2) ensure that adverse impacts to the uses and purposes of the Pea Island National Wildlife Refuge and the Cape Hatteras National Seashore are avoided, if possible, or minimized, and that, if the Secretary of the Army finds appropriate, unavoidable adverse impacts are mitigated.

By Mr. BARTLETT:

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, funds made available to any local educational agency under this title may be used for performance-based payments to teachers in accordance with a locally developed program for rewarding meritorious teaching.

By Mr. DANNEMEYER:

—Page 18, after line 8, insert the following new subsection:

(f) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no funds are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this Act for any fiscal year unless the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Secretary of Education, certifies to the Congress that expenditures incurred under such an appropriation will not result in an increase in the national debt of the United States.

By Mr. GOODLING:

—Page 17, line 7, insert before the period the following: ", or if the amount appropriated to carry out such chapter for such fiscal year does not equal or exceed the amount required to provide services under such chapter to 75 percent of the educationally deprived children eligible for such services".
